Our present system really breaks faith with the aliens who come to this country for the purpose of becoming citizens. It lessens the inducement for them to assume the obligations of citizenship if those who do not assume such obligations can have the same representation in Congress and the electoral college. Any alien who continues to owe his allegiance to a foreign government has no intention of becoming a citizen. If his only purpose here is to make money, and then, like some of the alien bootleggers, to rush back to his native land after defrauding Uncle Sam out of his income tax, this Nation owes him nothing, and is not under obligation to give any consideration to his desires. Neither is it under obligation to strengthen the political organizations that foster and protect and fatten on this degradation of national integrity.

On the other hand, those who come to this country because they have looked to it as the land of promise, who have become Americans in their hearts because of their desire to maintain the institutions which offer them freedom and opportunity will be glad to have an amendment of this kind adopted. It will make their citizenship worth more.

We not only owe it to the better element of our foreign born—those fine people who have already become citizens, and those who desire and intend to be citizens—to put this premium upon United States citizenship, but we have a solemn duty, first, to defend the Nation, and, second, to defend the rights, interests, and future of those who were born here, the descendants of the men and women whose vision, courage, labor, and sacrifice have made the Nation great and made its future vital to the welfare of the world.

JOHN R. FETTER

As in executive session—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table:

To the Senate of the United States:

I withdraw the nomination sent to the Senate on March 24, 1934, of John R. Fetter to be postmaster at Hopewell, in the State of New Jersey.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 14, 1934.

RELIEF OF DEBTORS IN BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5884) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Tuesday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 54 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned until Tuesday, April 17, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

WITHDRAWAL

Executive nomination withdrawn from the Senate April 14 (legislative day of Mar. 28), 1934

John R. Fetter to be postmaster at Hopewell, in the State of New Jersey.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, APRIL 16, 1934

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, our Heavenly Father, whose heart is love, whose face is light, and whose bosom is sympathy, be not silent unto us. Let the purest and the most unselfish conception of Thy mind and heart be given us, and out of it may there grow a wonderful ministry in the service of our country. We assemble again in this memorable Chamber; we have been intrusted with a great commission. O let a thousand chords of memory be struck, arousing in us the deepest sense of duty and responsibility. Almighty God, we pray that truth, justice, and righteousness may be established at this historic center, and it will be a long, long step to the redemption of our whole land from sea to sea; lead the way, O God, and when the evening bell rings, in sweet resignation, trust, and happy hope, may we bow our heads in gratitude to Thee. We pray in the name of Him at whose feet the wealth, the learning, and the prowess of the world have knelt in homage. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, April 13, 1934, was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 6084. An act for the relief of Lottie W. McCaskill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 450. An act to empower the health officer of the District of Columbia to authorize the opening of graves, and the disinterment and reinterment of dead bodies, in cases where death has been caused by certain contagious diseases;

S. 2641. An act to provide fees to be charged by the Recorder of Deeds of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

S. 2714. An act to amend section 895 of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia;

S. 3013. An act to amend sections 416 and 417 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia;

S. 3257. An act to change the designation of Four-and-a half Street SW., to Fourth Street;

S. 3289. An act to transfer the powers of the Board of Public Welfare to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

S. 3355. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Daniel Boone.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8402) to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H.R. 2032) for the relief of Richard A. Chavis disagreed to by the House, agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. COOLIDGE, and Mr. PATTERSON to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1076. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Franklin Surety Co.; and

S. 1091. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on the claims of Edward F. Goltra against the United States arising out of the taking of certain vessels and unloading apparatus.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation, which was read by the Clerk:

APRIL 16, 1934.

Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby resign from the Committee on Elections No. 1, the Committee on Claims, and the Committee on the District of Columbia.

With great respect, I am, yours very truly,

J. BAYARD CLARK.

The resignation was accepted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, would it be convenient to give us at this time the suspensions that will be taken up this afternoon?

The SPEAKER. H.R. 6166, introduced by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], for the payment of a certain amount to the Chippewa Indians out of their allotments.

H.R. 8018, introduced by Mr. DEAR, to authorize payment to reimburse States for the cost of levee rights-of-way.

H.J.Res. 302, introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], authorizing the Federal Memorial Commission to formulate plans for the construction of a Jefferson memorial.

SIGNATURES TO DISCHARGE RULE

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday afternoon the Washington Star published a dispatch, credited to the Associated Press, giving the names of 131 signers of a petition to discharge the committee from consideration of the Frazier-Lemke bill, an incompleted petition on the Speaker's desk. I do not think anybody in the House has any idea that this information was given out by any officer or employee of the House, but in view of the very emphatic ruling of the Speaker on last Thursday, when this matter was under discussion, I simply rise to inquire what is going to be done about it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. That information could reach that news service only through two avenues: One, by some employee of the House, and, second, some Member of the House giving the information; is that not the fact?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. By what other avenue could that information have gotten from the House to the newspaper?

Mr. WARREN. In no other way.

Mr. BLANTON. Then somebody connected with the House of Representatives has violated the rules of the House. Is that not so?

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Replying to the parliamentary inquiry, there is nothing the Chair can do about it. Of course, it is a breach of the privileges of the House, as the Chair ruled on last Thursday. The Chair thinks that a Member could rise to a question of the privilege of the House and offer a resolution having for its purpose an investigation of the entire subject. The Chair thinks that under the circumstances a question of privilege would be involved. The Chair, however, of his own motion, cannot do anything further about it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, with reference to that resolution wherein 145 names were required. In 1931 practically every Democrat voted for that rule, and practically every Republican voted against that rule. It is going to be necessary, in order to have that condition changed, that the Democrats rescind the vote they had in 1931 and correct their error and change the rule that they made the law of this House. It will be necessary for every Republican to vote for it in order that they do not get themselves in trouble by playing politics, because the shoe is on the wrong foot today, and the Democratic Party see that they did an injustice to the administration in 1931, and I think that they should correct their mistakes, which they now must admit is theirs for adopting such a rule.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. BYRNS. How would the gentleman vote upon the proposition to amend the rule making it 218?

Mr. RICH. You will have to bring in another rule today making it 218.

Mr. BYRNS. I am asking the gentleman what his own personal views are and how he would vote if such rule were brought in.

Mr. RICH. I voted against that rule in 1931, and I will vote to put it back to 218 today, because I thought it was wrong then and I think it is wrong now. I will not play politics when it is wrong to do so; two wrongs never made a right.

Mr. BYRNS. I am delighted to have some light from the gentleman's side of the Chamber. That is the first intimation I have had.

PRIVILEGE OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the high privilege of the House of Representatives, and I present a resolution at the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution offered by Mr. BLANTON:

"Whereas, in violation of the Rules of this House, the Hearst newspapers and the Star on two different occasions recently have published the names of Members who had signed an incomplete petition to discharge committees:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be, and is hereby, requested to inquire into and find out what Member or employee of this House has violated the rules and report their findings to this House."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there are but two ways, as admitted by the Chairman of the Committee on Accounts [Mr. WARREN], that this private, secret proceeding of the House and secret information of the House connected with it could leave its portals and become public in the newspapers. One is by some employee of the House giving it out. I cannot believe that there is any employee of this House who would give out information in violation of the rules. The other way is for some Member to give it out. I can hardly believe that a Member of this House would do it. But it has been given out by someone, and it must have come either from a Member or some employee.

Now, we Members sometimes assume to ourselves rights which we should not possess. No Member has a right to violate the rules of this House in giving out that infortion. That information is for the protection of the Membership of this House.

There is nothing to keep a Member from going to a newspaper reporter and telling him what he does himself. If you want to sign a petition to discharge you have the right to go to any newspaper reporter here in the Capitol and to tell him that you signed that petition; but you have no right to tell him what some other Member has done until that petition is completed, and then it would be spread upon the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and upon the Journal and becomes public property. Then, and then only, may a newspaper properly report it and print it.

I am surprised that this rule was violated by such a reputable newspaper reporting agency as the Associated Press—and it is a reputable agency—it is about the only agency in the country left in which the people have any confidence; but if it continues to violate the rules of this body and continues to do as it has been doing on some matters recently, the people may yet lose confidence in it, and God only knows then what will become of the reporting system of the country when the people lose confidence in the great Associated Press reports.

Now, the House of Representatives has been very kind to the Associated Press. It gives privileges to the Associated Press that few newspaper reporting agencies have ever enjoyed. Sixty-two reporters accredited to the Associated Press are allocated to the press gallery upstairs—62 of them. We have permitted the leading representatives of the Associated Press to come upon the floor of the House at will. What other reporters have this privilege? We let them come on this floor and talk with Members, and even talk with the Speaker and with the officers of this House, and with our steering committee. They ought not to violate our rules, considering the privileges on the floor of this House that we have given them.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I promised to yield first to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. I just wanted to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that a few days ago there was printed in the paper a picture of a Member of Congress signing one of these petitions.

Mr. BLANTON. I saw it. It was a picture showing our colleague, the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. KAHN], seated here at this clerk's desk, with clerks behind her and some men on the floor. It showed her signing a petition. Yet the newspaper that published that picture knew full well that a petition to discharge can be signed only in an open session of the House when no photographs can be taken here. They knew they were perpetrating a fraud upon the people of this country when they inserted that in their paper. They knew they were trying to make the people believe that they had taken a picture of such a secret proceeding of the House, when such picture was a sham and a fraud.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon and Mr. TRUAX rose.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield first to our distinguished major general from Oregon.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. This incident is an additional demonstration of what a "damn fool" rule this is.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. And I am ready to repeal it right now. Will not the gentleman now make the motion to repeal the rule?

Mr. BLANTON. I am ready to repeal the rule also. Such a resolution could come only from the Committee on Rules. To make such a motion now would be out of order, and some Member would make a point of order against it.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I am in favor of repealing this discharge rule now.

Mr. BLANTON. I agree with the gentleman, that the rule is now working badly and should be repealed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly I yield to the distinguished Chairman of our Rules Committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In the opinion of the Chair, does the resolution of the gentleman from Texas state a question of the privilege of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am pleased to yield to the distinguished banker and educator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. On Tuesday, December 8, 1931, the rule reducing the number of signers on a petition to discharge a committee from the consideration of a bill to 145 came before the House. At that time the gentleman from Oregon, who now condemns it, voted for it.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, we do lots of things sometimes because of party expediency which we find out afterward were wrong.

Mr. RICH. The Republicans voted against it then. I think the Republicans to be consistent would have to vote for a resolution increasing the number of signers; and if such a resolution is brought in there is no reason why the rule should not be changed.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. SCHULTE. The gentleman said that information regarding signers to a petition could be given out only by clerks of the House or Members or the newspaper reporter calling the different Members and asking whether or not they had signed. If the Members said they had, would not the newspaper then have the names?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, but they cannot get them in the order in which they signed the petition, as they did in the case of the petition which was printed in the paper. They have not called up all of the membership of the House; and even if they did, they would not get the names of the signers in the sequence in which they appeared on the petition.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the Senator from Ohio. [Applause.]

Mr. TRUAX. I think we are all agreed that there has been a violation of the rules.

I wonder what particular damage has been done to the country? Is it not strange that whenever there is a petition of this sort pending, the statement is made it is all wrong and ought to be repealed?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield to the gentleman for a campaign speech.

I will tell the Members why Mr. Hearst printed that. I will tell you why he has been attacking the leaders of the House, who are in charge of legislation here. I will tell you why he carries an infamous cartoon here in his Washington Herald this morning, picturing three leaders of this House as "sandbaggers" and "blackjackers", murdering in an alley, and crouching and sneaking away, naming them "Political Trickery", "Sharp Practice", and "Raw Deal." He pictures them common thugs. He thus denounced our Democratic leadership. I will tell you why Hearst can print that and get away with it. This is election year. He has money in the banks all over the United States that have failed. He wants to get his money back. He wants millions taken from overburdened taxpayers and paid to Hearst. He is looking out for the Hearst frozen deposits. It is purely a selfish interest which he has. He is trying to blackjack Congress into passing his bill. That is the reason why I condemned him the other day. It was not because he was espousing the McLeod bill. He has a right to espouse and properly fight for any bill he wants without being condemned. I did not condemn him for that, but I did condemn him for sending his reporters on to this floor in violation of House rules and stealing information from somebody who had no right to give it and to which he was not entitled. I said he ought to be sent to jail for 30 days, and I am still of the same opinion. He is a big, high financial mogul; and because he has plenty of money, what does he care about the rules of this House? Why, he ignores them and in his papers he tries to picture Congressmen as puppets and monkeys, and we let him get away with that kind of stuff because, forsooth, it is campaign year. He has no more respect for the Congress of the United States, the House or the Senate, than he has for a common, ordinary thug in an alley, because he pictured our Democratic leaders as thugs in his paper this morning because they would not allow the McLeod bill to be handled just like he wanted it to be handled.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. I do not uphold anyone who violates the rules of this House. I do not believe they should be violated. Again, I am as much opposed to the McLeod bill as anyone in the House, but this is the most public place in the United States. Why should there be any secrecy about a bill as important as the Frazier bill, which affects all of the farmers of the country?

Mr. BLANTON. Because it is a rule of this House. This House has a right to pass any kind of a rule that the majority wants to pass, whether it appeals to Hearst or not. Hearst is not our censor. This House is supreme in reference to its own business, and when it passes a rule and says that information shall not be given out, Mr. Hearst ought to obey it, and the Associated Press ought to obey the rule. We ought to take Hearst's reporters and every one of these 62 A.P. reporters out of the gallery if they ever violate our rules again, and tell them that they cannot sit there any longer if they violate the rules. I am not afraid to tell that to the A.P. and to Mr. Hearst. He has newspapers published in my State and will do what he can to injure me, but that does not scare me.

Mr. O'CONNOR. He was a former Member of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. He was a former Member of the House and the gentlemen here will remember what the former distinguished gentleman from Texas, Hon. Joe Bailey, the distinguished father of our present colleague, once told him. Hearst never will forget what Joe Bailey, Sr., told him.

Mr. KELLER. What did he tell him?

Mr. BLANTON. I will tell the gentleman on the outside. This morning, in his Herald, he attacks me in great big headlines and says I was rebuked in Chicago by certain depositors of Chicago, the so-called "United Depositors Association", of Illinois, who probably did not get as much as they wanted of that $70,000,000 Charley Dawes got from this Government, the Herald stating that I was against Hearst on account of the fact that he was for the McLeod bill. Whoever wrote that knew it was not so, and that there was not a word of truth in the statement.

I got after Hearst because he sneaked information of this House to which he was not entitled and published same. No one here knows what my stand is on the McLeod bill. It has not come up yet. But you will find what my stand is when the time comes. I have never straddled a fence on any public issue. You will find me on one side or the other of the line, fighting with all the vigor I possess in favor of what I believe is right.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman be kind enough to tell us whether or not, in his judgment, any newspaper could have secured that list of names other than by the help of somebody in the House?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly they could not. It is only Hearst and the Associated Press organization, as strong as it is, with 62 reporters in our press gallery, that would violate the rules of this House. I know we sit here like we were impotent. Hearst believes that we are afraid to do anything because he thinks we are afraid of his opposition. He knows election time is coming on in a few months.

I say to Mr. Hearst: "Go down into my district with your influential papers, if you wish. Instruct your papers down there to print untrue things about me, and I will meet you before the honest voters of my district anytime." For years he has been raising all of his cattle over in Old Mexico. He buys them over there for $4, $5, and $6 a head. He uses peon labor over there. He brings them across the Rio Grande and feeds them in pens in the State of Texas, and then sends them to the market, making his millions in that way. He thinks perhaps because he has some of them near my district that he can lambast me and call my colleagues, the leaders of this House, common thugs in his newspaper this morning and get away with such stuff as that, but he cannot. [Applause.]

Mr. WARREN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WARREN. I think the RECORD should show that this bill now under discussion was introduced by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE]. It is a fact that about 14 names were taken off of the petition and yet if press reports are true, the gentleman from North Dakota threatened to go on the air and personally denounce those 14 Members who have taken their names off of the petition.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what I have heard, although I have never heard it from the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE], and I do not know what are the facts. However, I want to say to my friend from North Carolina that when Mr. Hearst does not like what we are doing here he has a way of printing editorials at the top of the front page across all columns of his paper in great, big, box-car letters clear across the top of the front page telling us what we must do before sundown, telling us we have got to vote for this measure or that measure, and he thinks he is having some influence on the Members in an election year.

When he was making a fight here for restoration of full pay for Government employees I called his hand and showed he had not restored the cuts in his own pay roll. Oh, he restored them in the mechanical end of the business, because he is afraid of those boys. They are organized and affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and William Randolph Hearst walked up to the lick-log and restored all the cuts in the mechanical end of his business, but the boys on the reportorial staff are not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and I understand they have been cut three times, three different 10-percent cuts, and he has not yet restored all of their cuts. He is making some of them work for less than a living wage. And he buys his paper from Canada. He is a funny sort of an American.

I hope before he admonishes this Congress again about anything he will sit down in his office and give out an order restoring full pay to every employee he has on the Hearst pay roll, and then he can talk to Congress about full restoration. He cannot talk about pay cuts until he does that. He cannot starve his editorial boys and talk to Congress about full restoration of all pay cuts. I know he pays our good friend, Arthur Brisbane, than whom there is no greater journalist in the world, the biggest salary any journalist ever got, but he is entitled to all he gets. I know he pays Arthur Brisbane well, but he is starving the other boys.

I know there are in the newspaper game some common, ordinary cheap skates who will write almost anything about anybody for money, and I know that in the newspaper game there are high-class men whom you cannot buy, whom you could not with any sum of money hire to say a kind word about you if you did not deserve it or to condemn others—men like Arthur Brisbane, men like David Lawrence, men like Hugh Nugent Fitzgerald, of Texas, or Will Rogers. You cannot buy men like that, but there are cheap skates who, for a few dollars, would write any kind of article praising any kind of man or condemning anyone from the President down.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want to take further time, but I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The reason, I imagine, he pays Arthur Brisbane well is that he gets large profits out of the writings of Arthur Brisbane.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly. Arthur Brisbane's columns are read by the people all over the United States, and he earns every dollar he gets, and he brings in big money for Hearst, but these boys who plod for Hearst, these boys who sneak in here and get somebody to get them something they are not entitled to, he starves to death.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman would confine his remarks to a resolution which would change the number of signers to a petition to discharge a committee, the Republicans who opposed the reduction in 1931 should support your resolution in 1934 to increase the number to 218, if they do not play politics.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield further.

Mr. RICH. But bring in a resolution for 218 signatures; we should support it.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield further, Mr. Speaker. I want to conclude.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me to propound a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I intend to take only 2 minutes more. But I yield to my friend from Kentucky if he wants to ask me a question.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me to propound a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BLANTON. After I get through; yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to my friend from Texas to ask a question.

Mr. PATMAN. I hope the gentleman will take into consideration the fact, when he mentions repealing the discharge rule, that when 145 Members sign a petition a majority are in favor of the proposal, because there are so many Members who will not sign a petition at all, and furthermore it does not take 218 votes to pass a bill. Very few bills have ever been passed here with more than 150 Members voting in favor of it.

Mr. BLANTON. I helped my friend get his adjusted-compensation certificate pay bill out by signing the petition with the gentleman. The very minute he signed the petition I signed right next to him, did I not?

Mr. PATMAN. That is right.

Mr. BLANTON. And I have helped the gentleman at other times because I believed in the measure and it was a question of principle. I was with my friend on that proposition. We brought that bill out and passed it, but there are liable to be some bad bills brought out here from now on that ought to be stopped.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the majority leader, and then I shall conclude.

Mr. PATMAN. Let me finish my statement. In view of the fact that a majority of a committee composed of 21 members, or 11 of them, can get consideration of any proposal they want, and in view of the fact that one Member of the other body can get consideration of any proposal he wants, does not the gentleman think it is perfectly reasonable, although it may be embarrassing to us sometimes, to permit 145 Members to get consideration of a proposal on this floor?

Mr. BLANTON. In certain instances, like the adjusted-service compensation bill, yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman will yield, of course, there are many bills that 11 members of the entire committee cannot get considered in this House.

Mr. BLANTON. That is true, and the Rules Committee gives very careful attention to every proposal brought before them.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the majority leader, and then I am through.

Mr. BYRNS. I simply want to make this statement in reply to our friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]. In the Seventy-second Congress there were, as I recall, 12 bills which were sought to be brought up under discharge petitions signed by 145 Members. Only 5 of those bills were voted on, and only 1 of them passed upon final roll call. One of those bills received only 113 votes, although 145 had signed the petition.

Mr. BLANTON. The majority leader will remember what happened to the Barclay discharge motion after several weeks' fight over that bill.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield, that I may propound to the Speaker a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. It has been stated here in debate that a Member of the House, Mr. LEMKE, made a radio address in which he disclosed the names of certain Members that had withdrawn their names from a petition to discharge a committee. The parliamentary inquiry is whether or not, if that be true—and I am not saying whether it is or not—is it a violation of the rules of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I believe the President should ask this Congress to adjourn as soon as we can and get away from Washington, for staying here is going to cost the people a lot of money. [Cries of "Amen!" "Amen!"] He ought to send word to another part of this Capitol and tell those boys to finish the work we have done in the House and adjourn sine die and thereby save millions of dollars. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, this episode illustrates what frequently arises on the floor of the House—a matter comes up without any notice, and it seems that the House gets up a good deal of feeling and possibly some passion in the minds of some Members.

I want to make a brief statement as to how the proposition appeals to me on the spur of the moment.

I think if there is any man in the House who tries to be a stickler for observance of the rules of the House after a long service, it has been myself. We cannot get along in a body so large as this, with all the complex and involved procedure, without a rigid adherence to the rules of the House. The essential proposition involved here by the resolution of the gentleman from Texas is that it involves an infringement, at least a technical infringement, of one of the provisions of the discharge rule.

Very candidly it seems to me that if we have a rule all of its features ought to be preserved. But I trust that the gentleman from Texas will not insist upon action on his resolution this morning, for this reason: The resolution of the gentleman is evidently hurriedly prepared, and, although it sets out the gravamen of what he seeks to accomplish, I call the attention of my friend that in the form in which the resolution is framed it would be an innocuous resolution as far as any result is concerned.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. If the House passes this resolution and sends it to the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Alabama and his committee will be prepared to investigate and find out who violated the House rules, will he not? I would if I were chairman of the committee, and I am sure the gentleman from Alabama is much more competent than I am.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas—and I think he should give serious attention to the suggestion—I am not opposing the principle of the proposition; but the Committee on Rules has troubles of its own, and they are not seeking any additional burden, but if in the judgment of the House this is of sufficient importance to investigate, we will gladly assume that duty.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MAPES. I was interested in the parliamentary inquiry which the gentleman submitted to the Speaker. I should like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he thinks a resolution of this kind should be presented in this way and should be considered without any reference to anything?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman is a good parliamentarian. The gentleman is pretty well familiar with the precedents and practices of the House, but there is a considerable distinction between a matter involving the privilege of the House per se and an ordinary matter seeking investigation of certain facts. I think the Speaker has correctly ruled that this proposition as now presented does present, off hand, a matter affecting the privileges of the House. Of course, the ordinary way would be probably for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to introduce a resolution and have it referred to a committee, seeking investigation, but inasmuch as the gentleman has elected to follow the present course, I will say in all candor that I think the gentleman from Texas is within his rights.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield to me? I think we can arrange matters.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield first to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be some facts presented that the rules of the House have actually been violated before a resolution of this kind is considered?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, the gentleman asks me a technical question with reference to a matter of privilege. I have tried to answer it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I have such confidence in my colleague from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and his judgment, and I have such great respect and high regard for the gentleman, and I believe that even without passing this resolution we will find a way, without bothering his committee, of getting the facts that we want to get, and following his advice and suggestion, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the resolution.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope that will be granted.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Cannot the gentleman withdraw his resolution without asking unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can withdraw the resolution without unanimous consent.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the resolution, in spite of the reservation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. I simply wanted to help the gentleman from Texas.

DR. WIRT

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. In order to be fair and frank with the Membership of this House, I wish to make this statement:

On Wednesday, April 11, in response to a question asked me by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] in a discussion which involved the conduct of the Special Committee of Investigation of the House, I stated, among other things, that the committee was not persecuting or prosecuting Dr. Wirt.

I stated—

He was not here to be investigated. If he had been, I would have gone into his private character. If he had been, I would have brought out from him the fact that during the war, on account of his pro-German activities, he was confined to the jail at Gary, Ind. I did not bring any of that before the committee.

In correcting, revising, and extending my remarks, as provided under the rules of the House, I inserted the words " whether or not ", which is now in the RECORD. This should stand as it is.

After a thorough investigation of the report, which came to me by what anyone would consider reliable sources, I am convinced that the report is not true; and, therefore, as a man and a Member of this House, after ascertaining that the report was untrue and unfounded, and in order that no injustice might be done to Dr. Wirt, it is my duty to correct such statement made by me on the floor of the House on April 11. And I therefore tender my apology to Dr. Wirt. [Applause.]

I also make this statement here today for the purpose of showing that the committee was not prosecuting Dr. Wirt. It was simply investigating whether the statements made by Dr. Wirt, and read to the Committee on Interstate and foreign Commerce by Mr. Rand, were true or not. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

SPECULATION AND ACQUISITION AND MOVEMENT OF GOLD

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, there are a great many misleading and erroneous statements being made on a matter that is pending before this House for legislation, and for that reason, and to ascertain the facts and bring out the truth in this matter, I am introducing the following resolution:

Resolution to create a select committee to investigate speculations and profits in the acquisitions and movements of gold resulting from legislative or Executive action affecting the value of gold, and the acquisitions and holdings of silver in anticipation of legislative or Executive action

Resolved, That there is hereby created a select committee to be composed of five Members of the House, to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

SEC. 2. The committee is authorized and directed to conduct a thorough investigation of (1) the acquisitions, movements, and holdings since January 1, 1933, in gold coin or bullion, in the United States or elsewhere, whether or not speculative in character, in anticipation of legislative or Executive action with respect to gold, to ascertain the identity of individuals, partnerships, associations, corporations, or other holders of or dealers in gold profiting by such acquisitions, movements, and holdings of gold in their dealings with the United States Treasury and the amounts of profits accruing from such acquisitions, movements, and holdings of gold, and to ascertain the individuals, partnerships, associations, corporations, or other holders of or dealers in gold deriving speculative profits from purchases of gold abroad and the movement to the United States and sale thereof to the Treasury, and the amounts of profits accruing from such purchases and sales, and (2) the holdings and stocks of silver in private hands in the United States, or elsewhere, now being maintained in anticipation of legislation or Executive action relating to silver, the identity of the holders thereof and dealers therein and the investment or speculative profits that have accrued or may accrue to private persons or companies from acquisitions and holdings of silver as the result of any legislation or Executive action.

SEC. 3. The committee shall report to the House during the present session of Congress the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations, including such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable.

SEC. 4. For the purposes of this resolution the committee is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress in the District of Columbia or elsewhere as a whole or by subcommittee, at such times, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, by subpena or otherwise, to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures not in excess of amounts made available for the purposes of this resolution, as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman and shall be served by any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—ANNUAL REPORT, ASSISTANT DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS (H.DOC. NO. 303)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury forwarding the annual report of the Assistant Director General of Railroads for the calendar year 1933.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 13, 1934.

REDUCTION OF FEES IN NATURALIZATION PROCEEDINGS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the request contained in the resolution of the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring therein), I return herewith House Bill No. 3521, entitled "An act to reduce certain fees in naturalization proceedings, and for other purposes."

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 13, 1934.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following House concurrent resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

House Concurrent Resolution 36

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the action of the Vice President and of the Speaker of the House of Representatives in signing the enrolled bill (H.R. 3521) entitled "An act to reduce certain fees in naturalization proceedings, and for other purposes", be rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of such bill section 2 be stricken out and the Clerk shall insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. Subdivisions (b) and (c) of section 32 of the act of June 29, 1906, and subdivision (a) of section 33 of the act of June 29, 1906, which were added thereto by section 9 of the act of March 2, 1929 (45 Stat. 1512) and by section 4 of the act of May 25, 1932 (47 Stat. 165), as amended (U.S.C. Supp. VII, title 8, sec. 399 (b) and (c), and sec. 399 c (a)), are amended as follows: Whenever in said subdivisions the words 'a fee of $10' occur that shall be amended to read 'a fee of $5.'"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House concurrent resolution?

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think we should have some explanation of what this resolution does.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. When the bill passed the House, through error we misquoted a certain section of the Revised Statutes. The bill was passed by both the House and the Senate and was sent to the President. This is a correction of the error that was made in quoting the statute.

Mr. McFADDEN. Does it change the amount of the fee?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; it changes nothing except the error in the quotation of the statute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The House concurrent resolution was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes immediately after the reading of the Journal on Thursday, Patriots' Day. On April 19, 1775, " the shot that was heard around the world " was fired at Lexington, in my district. I wish to address the House on the anniversary of that day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PAN AMERICAN DAY

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, last Saturday was Pan American Day. Theretofore I had been asked to address the House on the subject of Pan American Day on last Saturday, but the adjournment prevented my doing so.

PAN AMERICAN DAY

Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, as the Representative from Puerto Rico, I have been granted the privilege—and I assure you it is one which I honor and enjoy—to make a few remarks in commemoration of another anniversary of Pan American Day, or, as it is sometimes called, "The Day of the Americas."

This opportunity to extend a most sincere and hearty greeting to the peoples and the governments of our sister republics of Latin America from the floor of this Chamber gives me inexpressible pleasure.

I have no doubt but that the policy President Roosevelt laid down in his inaugural address—that he would—

> Dedicate this Nation to the policy of the good neighbor, the neighbor who resolutely respects himself and, because he does so, respects the rights of others; the neighbor who respects his obligations and respects sanctity of his agreements in and with the world of neighbors.

I repeat, I have no doubt that this sentiment has gone far in dispelling any fears or suspicions which might have been entertained as to the future honesty of purpose and friendly feelings toward our sister Republics of Latin America.

Right here I should like to quote from an address delivered by the Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, before the National Press Club, February 10, 1934. It is as follows:

> The feasibility of international cooperation as a method of promoting the mutual interests of nations was demonstrated anew by the recent conference (of Montevideo). It must be agreed, too, that wherever countries have common purposes, common interests, and common objectives they will suffer incalculable losses by failure to cooperate practically with each other. All of the American nations can thus promote their respective civilizations, commerce, and many other logical relationships of great and lasting benefit to all.

I also should like to bring to your attention the thought which was expressed at the Pan American Labor Congress held in Washington, July 18–23, 1927, by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor. Speaking for labor, with the greatest desire of voicing the sentiments of the masses of American workers, he said:

> We proceed from an unselfish and altruistic point of view. We are interested in the human element in every nation and in every country upon the American Continent. We want to serve in such a way as to promote the intellectual, the spiritual, and the moral well-being of men and women. We seek to exploit no one. We seek only an opportunity to serve humanity and to help men and women to live a fuller, freer, and better life. We ask for nothing. We only seek to serve, and in that way we expect to advance the common interests of all the peoples in all the countries, and in that way we are contributing toward the welfare of society.

In tracing the origin of any important movement which has for its purpose the fulfilment of an ideal, it is necessary to give some consideration to the earliest expressions of that ideal. This great movement for friendly understanding among the peoples of America may be traced to the sentiments voiced at a conference held more than a hundred years ago—the so-called "Conference of Panama."

The principal treaty drafted at that congress, called in 1826 by the eminent South American liberator, Simon Bolivar, contained as one of its provisions:

> To secure to ourselves from this time forward the enjoyment of unalterable peace and to promote in this behalf better harmony and good understanding as well between countries, citizens, and subjects, respectively, as with other powers * * *.

On April 14, 1890, the First International Conference of American States, which has since developed into the Pan American Union, assembled in Washington, with the Secretary of State, the Honorable James G. Blaine, as chairman. Forty years later, May 7, 1930, the board of the Pan American Union, which consists of the diplomatic representatives of the member States accredited to the Government of the United States, assembled in this city, and concluded to suggest a certain day each year upon which the people might recall the community of interests, the unity of sentiments and aspirations, the ties of history, and the intimate relationships which bind each country to the other nations of America. For obvious reasons the 14th of April was selected as such a day.

A quarter century ago the former President of Uruguay, José Battle y Ordóñez, said:

> Born on the same continent and in the same epoch, ruled by the same institutions, animated by the same spirit of liberty and progress, and destined alike to cause republican ideas to prevail on earth, it is natural that the nations of all America should approach nearer and nearer to each other and unite more and more amongst themselves; and it is natural also that the most powerful and the most advanced amongst them should be the one to take the initiative in this union.

And ever since the secretaryship of James G. Blaine in the State Department the United States Government has taken the lead in what is known as the "Pan American movement."

The center of this movement is the beautiful building here in Washington given by Andrew Carnegie. There the Pan American Union is engaged in a great constructive task intended to bring cooperation to all the peoples of the continent and to cultivate them into a single family in which an irresistible feeling of fraternal friendship will ever predominate. It is nonpolitical in nature and its functions are to disseminate information regarding the American republics, to serve as an office of record for inter-American understandings and agreements, and as a permanent commission sitting between the International Conferences of the American States. At times it has been bitterly opposed; at other times the Latin Americas have enthusiastically supported it. "Selfish considerations of trade" are given by those who opposed it as the prime interest of the North Americans in promoting Pan Americanism. Be that as it may, I reiterate, the President's attitude, as expressed in his inaugural address, should have allayed any misgivings in that respect.

Present conditions, not only in the American Continent but throughout the world, have emphasized the need of American solidarity, and, if I may so suggest, in this Pan American movement, which seeks to strengthen the ties of the United States and Latin Americas in the highly laudable and worthy journey toward the final goal of continental weal, fate already has designated the advanced guard. Geographically this advanced guard is Puerto Rico, the community whom I represent, the one spot in this hemisphere where two great peoples and two mighty civilizations are bent to the task of creating the composite mind of a new, understanding America. [Applause.]

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested to ask unanimous consent that Subcommittee No. 10 of the Committee on Military Affairs may have permission to sit during the session of the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the country as a whole is waiting for some constructive legislation and not a lot of gas. I object to the gentleman's request.

Mr. McGUGIN. Was it gas when the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] spoke a while ago?

MOTHER'S DAY

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address the House of Representatives on the subject of Mother's Day, which will occur on May 13, 1934. On this day all of our citizens will pay tribute to American motherhood, and it is fitting that the Congress should be addressed on this subject by a mother who is also a Member of the Congress.

I especially wish to pay tribute to our American war mothers, who are organized and chartered by the Congress of the United States under the name of the American War Mothers' Association. My reason for paying special tribute to war mothers on Mother's Day is because it was these mothers who sent their sons to defend the flag and defend our Nation from foreign invasion in time of war and made a great contribution toward the security of our Nation.

The evil forces of the depression may have caused the American people to have forgotten, for the moment, the great services our American veterans rendered in times when our national security was endangered, but we will never forget the mothers of these veterans who made the greatest contribution toward national security.

I am happy to advise the Members of Congress that our Government has recognized the American war mothers through the authorization of a special Mother's Day stamp which the President of the United States, Hon. Franklin Delano Roosevelt, and Postmaster General James A. Farley, authorized to be placed on sale in Washington, D.C., on May 2, 1934.

As a further evidence and tribute to the American war mothers who are organized as the American War Mothers' Association for the purpose of conducting acts of charity among the veterans and their families, a specially designed envelop of conventional size has been authorized by Mrs. W. E. Ochiltree, president, and Mrs. H. H. McCluer, past president, upon which the official Mother's Day stamp may be affixed. The cancelation of the stamp will evidence its first day use and the compliment which every citizen desires to pay his or her mother.

As a tribute to our American war mothers and to our American veterans, I hope that every Member of Congress will make a liberal use of the Mother's Day stamp affixed to the special envelop, which the War Mothers' Association has authorized and which will be on sale on May 2, 1934.

In this manner we will pay a national tribute to the motherhood of America, and especially our American war mothers.

I thank you.

[Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, last week I pointed out that between $15,000 and $20,000 of the people's money had been spent on Dr. Wirt as a result of the resolution, committee hearings, and the use of space in the RECORD and time of the House. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Kansas whether he intends to continue this Wirt comic opera in the 5 minutes he requests and continue wasting the taxpayers' time and money?

Mr. McGUGIN. I want the committee to get its program in such shape that the people will get their money's worth for the $15,000 or $20,000 that the gentleman says is being spent. I want to call all of the witnesses.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the Consent Calendar.

The Clerk called the first bill on the Consent Calendar, H.R. 4870, a bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Sabine at or near Port Arthur, Tex.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I object. There is going to be no business done today.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, let the gentleman object all he wants, just so the RECORD shows it is he who is holding up the business of the House.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a point of order; the bill was objected to once on May 16. I understand three objections are required to take it off the calendar at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct; three objections are necessary.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EAST BAY MUNICIPAL UTILITY DISTRICT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6530, granting and confirming to the East Bay Municipal Utility District, a municipal utility district of the State of California and a body corporate and politic of said State and a political subdivision thereof, certain lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the author of the bill accept an amendment striking out section 2 of the bill?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Yes; that is agreeable.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the bill, S. 2084, for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the East Bay Municipal Utility District, a municipal utility district of the State of California and a body corporate and politic of said State and a political subdivision thereof, the following-described lands of the United States situate in the counties of Amador and Calaveras, State of California, to wit:

The southeast quarter southeast quarter section 22; the northeast quarter southwest quarter, and the south half southeast quarter section 23; the northwest quarter northeast quarter, and the north half southeast quarter section 24; the southwest quarter, the south half northwest quarter, and the northwest quarter northwest quarter section 26, all in township 5 north, range 10 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian.

All the unpatented land in the east half northwest quarter section 15, containing approximately forty-seven and thirty-six one hundredths acres; the south half northeast quarter, and the north half southeast quarter section 17; and all the unpatented land in section 18 (the same being a fractional portion of the southeast quarter northeast quarter, and a fractional portion of the northeast quarter southeast quarter, and containing approximately 15.58 acres), all in township 5 north, range 11 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue patent to the said district for the same.

All of the above-described land is now held by said district by virtue of that certain license no. 567, heretofore issued to said district by the Federal Power Commission. Upon this grant becoming effective said license is terminated and the parties thereto relieved of all obligation by reason thereof, and the fee title of the district to its dams, spillways, conduits, tunnels, power house, power lines, and other structures now constructed in whole or in part on said lands and the right to maintain and operate the same is fully confirmed.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby further granted to the said East Bay Municipal Utility District the following-described lands of the United States situate in the counties of Amador and Calaveras, State of California, to wit:

The northeast quarter southeast quarter, and the south half southeast quarter section 1; all the unpatented portion of the southwest quarter southeast quarter section 3, containing approximately 20.90 acres; and all the unpatented portion of the northeast quarter southwest quarter section 10, containing approximately 4.60 acres, all in township 5 north, range 11 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian.

All the unpatented portion of the west half northwest quarter section 5, containing approximately 72.16 acres; lot 1, the south half northeast quarter, the south half northwest quarter, and the north half southwest quarter section 6 (the same being all the unpatented land in said section 6 and containing approximately 281.13 acres), all in township 5 north, range 12 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian.

The southwest quarter southeast quarter, and the south half southwest quarter section 32, all in township 6 north, range 12 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue patent to the said district for the same: Provided, That as to the lands in this section described this grant shall in no way operate to interfere with the right of any settler or other claimant under the mineral or public-land laws to complete a claim to any portion of said land heretofore lawfully initiated and now valid and subsisting, and as to the lands described in section 2 hereof the title of the district shall be subject to any such valid and subsisting claims: Provided further, That there be reserved to the United States all coal, oil, gas, and other minerals together with the right of the United States, its grantees or permittees, to prospect for, mine, and remove the same.

SEC. 3. That the grant of the said lands hereinbefore described is made in aid of the water supply of said district for itself and its inhabitants, and the said district shall pay for the said lands the sum of $5 per acre.

SEC. 4. That the rights hereby granted shall revert to the United States if abandoned or transferred to any person, association, or corporation other than to the State or to another municipal corporation.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT: On pages 3 and 4 strike out section 2 of the bill and amend the numbering of sections 3 and 4 accordingly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

INTERNATIONAL TECHNICAL COMMITTEE OF AERIAL LEGAL EXPERTS

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 271, providing for an annual appropriation to meet the quota of the United States toward the expenses of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this resolution provides for an annual junket abroad, and I object. Others will object also, which will make the required number of objections necessary to kill the bill.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I object.

Mr. TRUAX. I object.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I object.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, may proceed for 1 minute?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, we have had this up before, and I object.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I dislike for a man on this floor to say that this resolution provides for a junket. I wanted to tell the gentleman what I thought about the matter.

Mr. BLANTON. I know something about the resolution. I have stopped it from passing before.

DECLARATIONS OF INTENTION

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8317, to extend the validity of declarations of intention beyond 7 years.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I understood that there was an objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill was passed over without prejudice.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understood an objection had been made to the bill.

Mr. LANZETTA. I asked that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. At the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LANZETTA], the bill was passed over without prejudice.

METHOD OF SELLING REAL ESTATE UNDER DECREE OF UNITED STATES COURTS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1567, amending section 1 of the act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat.L. 751), providing for the method of selling real estate under an order or decree of any United States court.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of Congress approved the 3d day of March 1893, chapter 225, be amended so as to read as follows:

"All real estate or any interest in land sold under any order or decree of any United States court shall be sold at public sale at the courthouse of the county, parish, or city in which the property, or the greater part thereof, is located, or upon the premises, as the court rendering such order or decree of sale may direct: Provided, however, That the court may, upon petition therefor and a hearing thereon after such notice to parties in interest as said court shall direct, if it find that the best interests of said estate will be conserved thereby, order and decree the sale of such real estate or interest in land at private sale."

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 7, insert the following: "Provided further, That the court shall appoint three disinterested persons to appraise said property, and said sale shall not be confirmed for less than two thirds of the appraised value."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COCHETOPA NATIONAL FOREST, COLO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2862, to add certain lands to the Cochetopa National Forest in the State of Colorado.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The gentleman was not standing when he made his objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman has to rise to his feet when he makes an objection.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Kansas if he really seriously intends to carry out his threat of interfering with the business of the House and preventing the Members' getting consideration of their bills by unanimous consent on this calendar merely because someone, in pursuance of his constitutional rights, objected to the gentleman's consuming 5 minutes' time in order to talk about Dr. Wirt, whom the gentleman has talked about every day since this investigation was started? Is that the gentleman's intention?

Mr. McGUGIN. That is one of the intentions, and the other one is that the gentleman from Tennessee, the majority leader, made the same objection and adjourned this House at 2:30 Friday rather than permit me to talk. That is the responsibility of that side of the House, and goes to the majority leader himself.

Mr. BYRNS. The other Members of the House feel that it is something more important to pass important legislation than to discuss Dr. Wirt, whom the gentleman has discussed at length already.

Mr. McGUGIN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] spoke, and now I am denied the opportunity.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] made an explanation. He made no further statement.

Mr. McGUGIN. I should have the right to have 5 minutes if the gentleman from North Carolina has 5 minutes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Colorado a question in reference to this and similar bills. This proposes to extend the area of the national forest in the State of Colorado. I asked the similar question in reference to Calendar No. 124—that is, whether or not in the acquisition, additional private lands were involved?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, no.

Mr. GOSS. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman knows my interest in these bills. I do not know that I have any objection to this, because it is a small amount of acreage which they can use. But the gentleman is familiar with the fact that in the other bill they asked an addition of 177,000 acres, when the Government will use only a part of it. I have talked with the gentleman from Colorado, and he knows my objection to putting in a large acreage which would be used over a period of from 40 to 50 years.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. In answer to the gentleman from Connecticut, I will say that the Forest Service officials have made an extensive investigation of all the lands covered by this bill and they are heartily in favor of this bill; in fact, the form of the bill and the specific lands included were prepared in cooperation with the Forest Service people. They say all these lands can and properly should be added to that forest reserve and it will not involve any additional expense of administration. They want to protect the foliage, prevent overgrazing and erosion, and conserve the water supply, which in part furnishes water to the city of Denver, and also for irrigation on the streams in the lower altitudes. There is on a large part of it a growth of brush and timber which is not at present of merchantable value. It is really a very beneficial measure. Practically all the people in that part of the State are in favor of it. I have had these bills pending for some 2 years, and I trust the gentleman will not object to either of them.

Mr. GOSS. Does not the gentleman realize that the Government is not going to use 177,000 acres? The gentleman knows of bills where they have got a million acres, and only 15,000 being used.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. These lands quite largely cover the headwaters of several streams. These waters are very valuable and this measure will be used to conserve those water supplies, to prevent erosion, pollution, and waste of the water. These two bills are throughly practical and important conservation measures.

Mr. GOSS. I am interested in the gentleman's remarks about the water supply, and under the circumstances I withdraw the objection.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described lands be, and the same are hereby, added to and made a part of the Cochetopa National Forest in the State of Colorado and are hereafter to be administered under the laws and regulations relating to the national forests:

Provided, That the inclusion of any of the aforesaid land in the Cochetopa National Forest shall not affect adversely any valid application or entry pending at the date of the approval of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 13, after the colon, strike all that follows up to and including the semicolon in line 15.

Page 3, line 9, after the semicolon following the number 18, insert the words "west half section 19; ".

Page 6, line 4, strike out the number "26" and insert in lieu the number "36."

Page 6, line 10, after the word "half", insert a comma.

Page 7, line 5, strike out the words "valid application or entry pending" and insert in lieu thereof the following words: "valid right existing under the public land laws."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PIKE NATIONAL FOREST, COLO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2858, to add certain lands to the Pike National Forest, Colo.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described lands be, and the same are hereby, added to and made a part of the Pike National Forest, in the State of Colorado, and are to be hereafter administered under the laws and regulations relating to the national forests:

Township 9 south, range 77 west, sixth principal meridian: West half northwest quarter and west half southwest quarter section 30; northwest quarter northwest quarter, south half northwest quarter, south half northeast quarter, and south half section 31; south half northwest quarter, south half northeast quarter, and south half section 32.

Township 10 south, range 77 west, sixth principal meridian: North half section 5; north half and southwest quarter section 6; west half section 7; west half and south half southeast quarter section 18; north half northwest quarter and north half northeast quarter section 19; southwest quarter section 30; and west half section 31.

Township 10 south, range 78 west, sixth principal meridian: South half section 35 and south half section 36.

Township 11 south, range 77 west, sixth principal meridian: West half southwest quarter and southeast quarter southwest quarter section 19; west half northwest quarter and west half southwest quarter section 27.

Township 11 south, range 78 west, sixth principal meridian: Sections 3, 10, 15, 22, and the west half southwest quarter section 14; west half northwest quarter and south half section 23; and the south half section 24.

The inclusion of any of the aforesaid land in the Pike National Forest shall not affect adversely any valid application or entry pending at the date of approval of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, after line 20, insert:

"Township 12 south, range 77 west, sixth principal meridian: West half southwest quarter section 11; west half northwest quarter, west half southwest quarter, southeast quarter southwest quarter section 14; northwest quarter section 23; southwest quarter section 26; north half section 34, and northwest quarter section 35.

"Township 13 south, range 77 west, sixth principal meridian: West half southwest quarter section 2; south half section 3; all of section 10; west half northwest quarter and west half southwest quarter section 11."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS ADJACENT TO NATIONAL FORESTS IN COLORADO

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3206, for the exchange of lands adjacent to national forests in Colorado.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. TRUAX. I will withhold the objection to allow the gentleman from Colorado to make a statement.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Apparently some controversy has developed between the Interior Department and the Department of Agriculture over these two bills. I should like to have this bill and the next bill passed over until the next Consent Calendar day to see whether or not they can adjust their differences on this legislation.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman suggests there is some controversy between the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture over these two bills. Both of these bills propose to give the Secretary of Agriculture complete power and authority to trade any piece of Government-owned land for any piece of privately owned land adjoining. Is that not true?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Within 6 miles of the present existing boundaries of the national forests.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PROVISIONS OF FOREST EXCHANGE ACT OF MARCH 20, 1922

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5368, to extend the provisions of the Forest Exchange Act of March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. 465).

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman withhold his objection until I can make a statement?

Mr. TRUAX. I withhold the objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The Interior Department was represented all the time at the hearings before the Committee on the Public Lands when these bills were being considered. They made no objection whatever to these bills. On Saturday morning since these bills were reached the last time on the Consent Calendar, I received a letter transmitted by the Public Lands Committee stating objections which had been cured by amendment in the Committee on the Public Lands. I think the gentleman would be losing no rights to let these bills go over without objection to the next Consent Calendar day.

Mr. TRUAX. I would say that I personally want to stop legislation that gives such vast power and authority to any official, whether he be a Cabinet official or otherwise.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to ask the gentleman if he is sure of the grounds on which he is basing his objection?

Mr. TRUAX. I am basing my objection on the bill and upon the report attached thereto.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. What would be the basis upon which you could ever make any exchange of property?

Mr. TRUAX. You could get the exchanges ready for a committee of Congress to consider, and have it acted upon.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Oh, that would be impossible.

Mr. TRUAX. Oh, it could be done. It was done in Ohio when I was commissioner of public lands.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. On the next call of the Consent Calendar it will require three objections. There will be ample time in the meantime to discuss the matter.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMENDING UNITED STATES CRIMINAL CODE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7357, to amend section 109 of the United States Criminal Code so as to except officers of the United States Naval and Marine Corps Reserve not on active duty from certain of its provisions.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 109 of the United States Criminal Code (U.S.C., title 18, sec. 198) be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto another sentence reading as follows: "Officers of the United States Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve, while not on active duty shall not, by reason solely of their appointments, oaths, commissions, or status as Reserve officers, or any duties or functions performed, or pay or allowances received as Reserve officers, be held or deemed to be officers or employees of the United States, or persons holding any office of trust or profit or discharging any official function under or in connection with any department of the Government of the United States."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ARMISTICE DAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7597, declaring November 11 a legal public holiday, to be known as "Armistice Day."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill, if passed, would create another national holiday, and we have too many of them already. We must not create any more national holidays. I object. Two other gentlemen will object, which makes the three objections required.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RADIO ACT OF 1927

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2660, to amend the Radio Act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (44 Stat. 1162).

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

AMENDING BANKRUPTCY ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8332, to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", as amended by the acts of February 5, 1903, June 15, 1906, June 25, 1910, March 2, 1917, January 7, 1922, May 27,

1926, February 11, 1932, and March 3, 1933, be, and it is hereby, amended by adding to chapter 8, section 74, entitled "Provisions for the Relief of Debtors", a new subsection, to be entitled subsection (q), as follows:

"(q) In the administration of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States', approved July 1, 1898, as amended, the district court or any judge thereof shall make in its or his discretion such an equitable distribution of appointments as receiver as will prevent any persons, firms, or corporations from having a monopoly of such appointments within such district."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

AMELIA ISLAND LIGHTHOUSE RESERVATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2828, to authorize the city of Fernandina, Fla., under certain conditions, to dispose of a portion of the Amelia Island Lighthouse Reservation.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the payment of $1,000 by the city of Fernandina, Fla., to the Secretary of Commerce such city is authorized to convey, without regard to the conditions and limitations of paragraph (6) of section 1 and of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to dispose of certain lighthouse reservations, and to increase the efficiency of the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes", approved May 22, 1926, and without regard to the conditions and limitations of the act entitled "An act to authorize the city of Fernandina, Fla., under certain conditions, to dispose of a portion of the Amelia Island Lighthouse Reservation", approved March 3, 1931, the land conveyed to such city pursuant to paragraph (6) of section 1 of the act approved May 22, 1926, a tract bounded on the south by so much of the shell road as crosses section 12, on the east by the eastern boundary of section 12 with a water front 960 feet more or less, on the north by a straight line extending from such eastern boundary for 1,000 feet, more or less, to the western boundary of section 12, and on the west by the western boundary of section 12 extending 1,000 feet, more or less, to the shell road, containing 20 acres, more or less. Any conveyance made by such city shall contain express conditions reserving to the United States (1) a perpetual easement for beams of light from the Amelia Island Lighthouse, and (2) the right to trim any trees and to limit the height of any structures erected on such property that may obstruct the beams of such light.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

TURTLE MOUNTAIN CHIPPEWA INDIANS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CARTWRIGHT submitted the conference report (Rept. No. 1247) to accompany the bill (S. 326) referring the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota to the Court of Claims for adjudication and settlement.

CONSENT CALENDAR

LEVEE RIGHTS-OF-WAY, MISSISSIPPI VALLEY

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H.R. 8018, to authorize payment for the purchase of, or to reimburse States or local levee districts for the cost of, levee rights-of-way for flood-control work in the Mississippi Valley, and for other purposes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask the author of the bill whether it does not call for reimbursement of States and local levee districts of several millions of dollars where levees have been constructed?

Mr. DEAR. It does not call for any appropriation. It is an authorization to reimburse the Levee Board for money expended to purchase rights-of-way for the Federal Government.

Mr. SNELL. In effect, it is an appropriation.

Mr. DEAR. No. The Government would spend this money anyway. In other words, the levee districts purchase rights-of-way for the Government because they can buy them at a very much lower price.

Mr. ELTSE of California. A tremendous amount of money is involved. These levee districts eventually will receive the money from the Government in some manner.

Mr. DEAR. Yes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. How many millions of dollars are involved?

Mr. DEAR. To carry on the flood-control program the War Department estimates that it will eventually spend $3,000,000; but if this bill is not passed, it will cost them $4,000,000.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that so much money is involved in this bill, it seems to me it should receive more consideration; that at least it should be called up under suspension.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELTSE of California. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. In my opinion, this bill should receive more consideration than is possible to give it today. It should be fully explained. I cannot understand why this bill is necessary if they have these powers under the law as it exists at the present time.

Mr. WILSON. I will explain the bill if the gentleman wishes.

Mr. SNELL. No; I think we should have more time for its consideration. We may want a roll call on it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CALIFORNIA DEBRIS COMMISSION

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1503, to amend the act entitled "An act to create the California Debris Commission and regulate hydraulic mining in the State of California", approved March 1, 1893, as amended.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 18 of the act entitled "An act to create the California Debris Commission and regulate hydraulic mining in the State of California", approved March 1, 1893, as amended (U.S.C., title 33, sec. 678), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 18. The said commission may, at any time when the condition of the navigable rivers or when the capacities of all impounding and settling facilities erected by mine owners or such as may be provided by Government authority require same, modify the order granting the privilege to mine by the hydraulic mining process so as to reduce the amount thereof to meet the capacities of the facilities then in use; or, if actually required in order to protect the navigable rivers from damage or in case of failure to pay the tax prescribed by section 23 hereof within 30 days after same becomes due, may revoke same until the further notice of the Commission."

SEC. 2. Section 23 of such act, as amended (U.S.C., title 33, sec. 683), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 23. Upon the construction by the said commission of dams or other works for the detention of debris from hydraulic mines and the issuing of the order provided for by this act to any individual, company, or corporation to work any mine or mines by hydraulic process, the individual, company, or corporation operating thereunder working any mine or mines by hydraulic process, the debris from which flows into or is in whole or in part restrained by such dams or other works erected by said commission, shall pay for each cubic yard mined from the natural bank a tax equal to the total capital cost of the dam, reservoir, and rights-of-way divided by the total capacity of the reservoir for the restraint of debris, as determined in each case by the California Debris Commission, which tax shall be paid annually on a date fixed by said commission and in accordance with regulations to be adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized to receive the same. All sums of money paid into the Treasury under this section shall be set apart and credited to a fund to be known as the "debris fund", and shall be expended by said commission under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers and direction of the Secretary of War, in addition to the appropriations made by law in the construction and maintenance of such restraining works and settling reservoirs, as may be proper and necessary: Provided, That said commission is hereby authorized to receive and pay into the Treasury from the owner or owners of mines worked by the hydraulic process, to whom permission may have been granted so to work under the provisions thereof, such money advances as may be offered to aid in the construction of such impounding dams, or other restraining works, or settling reservoirs, orsites therefor, as may be deemed necessary by said commission to protect the navigable channels of said river systems, on condition that all moneys so advanced shall be refunded as the said tax is paid into the said debris fund: And provided further, That in no event shall the Government of the United States be held liable to refund same except as directed by this section."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 3, lines 10 and 11, strike out the words "in addition to the appropriations made by law in the construction and maintenance of such" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For repayment of any funds advanced by the Federal Government or other agency for the construction of."

Page 3, lines 14 and 15, strike out "as may be proper and necessary" and insert in lieu thereof "and for maintenance: Provided."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LIGHTHOUSE DEPOT, NEW ORLEANS, LA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R.7488, authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to acquire a site for a lighthouse depot at New Orleans, La., and for other purposes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice on page 2 of the bill that the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to erect upon such site certain wharves, docks, and other structures. This is an indirect appropriation of money, is it not?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. No. The sum of $177,000 was allocated by the P.W.A.

The depth of water in the inner harbor canal is only 9 feet, whereas on the river front there is a depth of from 40 to 60 feet. The acquisition of this site in reality will save the Government money.

Mr. ELTSE of California. The gentleman notices that the bill authorizes the expenditure of $20,000 for the purchase of the site in the first instance, and in the second instance it authorizes the Secretary of Commerce to construct wharves and docks. In the first instance, it is stated that funds may be allotted and made available for this project by proper authority.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Yes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Why should there not be the same amendment with respect to the construction of the wharves and docks?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I may say to the gentleman that the amendments were prepared by the Department of Commerce.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Is the gentleman agreeable to having the same amendment added to the other provision?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. That is perfectly agreeable.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to acquire, by purchase from the Board of Commissioners of the Port of New Orleans, New Orleans, La., a 99-year lease of a site on which is to be located the New Orleans Lighthouse Depot for a consideration of $20,000 for the 99 years, payment thereof to be made upon approval of the lease by the Secretary of Commerce. The site shall contain approximately 2.28 acres, description of which by metes and bounds shall be incorporated in the lease; and the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to erect upon such site such wharves, docks, and other structures as he may determine to be feasible and suitable for the purposes of the lighthouse depot.

SEC. 2. Payment for the purchase of the lease and for the erection of necessary structures and other improvements for the lighthouse depot is authorized to be made from funds allotted by the Public Works Administrator made available in the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "99-year lease" and insert the words "lease for not exceeding 99 years" in lieu thereof.

Line 7, after word "of", insert words "not exceeding."

Line 9, after word "Commerce", strike out period, and add the following words: "from funds allotted and made available for this project by proper authority."

Strike out section 2.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ELTSE of California: Page 2, line 9, after the word "depot", strike out the period and insert the following: "and to make payment therefor from funds allotted and made available for this project by proper authority."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PASS A'LOUTRE LIGHTHOUSE RESERVATION, LA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7551, authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to dispose of the Pass A'Loutre Lighthouse Reservation, La.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman from Louisiana any objection to the inclusion of an amendment in this bill providing that title shall revert to the United States in the event the lands are no longer used for park purposes?

Mr. FERNANDEZ. There is no question of a park involved. This is an old lighthouse reservation. Due to the need for economy, the Government has had to abandon this lighthouse, and the land simply reverts to the State of Louisiana.

Mr. ELTSE of California. The bill as drawn reads that the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to convey by quitclaim deed to the State of Louisiana for State park purposes.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I am familiar with this land. They could not possibly use it for a park. There are only 200 acres on the site, and it is on an island. I would have no objection, however, to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from California.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to convey by quitclaim deed to the State of Louisiana for State park purposes the Pass A'Loutre Lighthouse Reservation, La., and all appurtenant structures located thereon, said reservation being described as follows: A tract of land known as the "Pass A'Loutre Lighthouse Reservation", situated in township 22 south, range 21 east, on the southwest portion of Middle Ground at the confluence of North Pass and Pass A'Loutre, Mississippi River Delta, La., comprising all that portion of sections 1 and 2 on Middle Ground west of a bayou which runs approximately north and south across Middle Ground, the mouth of said bayou being about 760 yards east of Pass A'Loutre Lighthouse tower, containing approximately 200 acres.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ELTSE of California: Page 2, line 6, after the word "acres", strike out the period and insert a colon and add the following: "Provided, That if the use of the land is discontinued for park purposes the title shall revert to the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WITHDRAWAL OF PUBLIC LANDS FROM SETTLEMENT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4349, to withdraw certain public lands from settlement and entry.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the public lands of the United States within the boundaries hereinafter described are hereby withdrawn from settlement, location, sale, and entry under the public-land laws of the United States for a local park, recreational purposes, and for securing favorable conditions of water flows. The lands herein referred to are located in the State of California and more particularly bounded and described as follows:

The east half section 32, township 20 north, range 5 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, containing 320 acres: Provided, That the Board of Supervisors of Butte County, in which said lands are located, shall make and enforce all such local, police, sanitary, and other rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the rights of the United States therein, as may be necessary for the preservation and use of said lands by the public as a local public park and recreation ground and for the preservation of animal life thereon, for the preservation of order thereon, and for the purpose of securing favorable conditions of water flows therefrom, including the right to construct roads and trails thereon and a conduit or ditch for conveying water for the public-park uses in immediate connection therewith: Provided further, That this act shall not defeat or affect any lawful rights which have already attached under the public land or mining laws: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may, when in his judgment the public interest would be best served thereby, restore to settlement, location, sale, or entry any of the lands hereby withdrawn therefrom: And provided further, That such lands shall be subject to a reservation of the right of the United States or its permittees or licensees to enter upon, occupy, and use any part or all of said lands necessary in the judgment of the Federal Power Commission for the purposes of the Federal Water Power Act with payment by the United States or any licensee for damages to improvements made by the Board of Supervisors of Butte County, Calif.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RETAIL LIQUOR DEALERS' STAMP TAX

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3768, to change the name of the retail liquor dealers' stamp tax in the case of retail drug stores or pharmacies.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of subdivision "Fourth" of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 26, sec. 205 (a)), is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: "The tax required to be paid by this paragraph shall, in case of a retail drug store or pharmacy making sales of liquors through a duly licensed pharmacist, be designated as a 'medicinal spirits stamp tax.'"

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GREAT SMOKY MOUNTAINS NATIONAL PARK

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7360, to establish a minimum area for the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, and for other purposes.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order to section 2 of the bill on the ground that it carries an appropriation. If the gentleman would accept an amendment in line 5, page 2, striking out the words "and made available" and insert in line 9 after the word "hereby", "authorized to be made", I should not have to make the point of order. Otherwise I am compelled to make the point of order because this carries an appropriation. Would the gentleman be willing to make simply an authorization of an appropriation out of this?

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, the amendment will be satisfactory.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I call attention of the author of the bill to the fact that in Tennessee there are quite a few suits pending and some judgments against the commission down there growing out of the acquisition of the Smoky National Park. I should like to know if the gentleman thinks the language of this bill is sufficient to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to adjust those controversies and pay off the judgments.

Mr. WEAVER. I am quite sure, Mr. Speaker, that that will be the case.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. May I also ask the gentleman if, under the Executive order which affords the basis for this legislation, the Secretary of the Interior expects to utilize the Tennessee Commission and the North Carolina Commission in the acquisition of this additional territory?

Mr. WEAVER. I may say to the gentleman from Tennessee that if he will read the Executive order under which the allocation of these lands has been made, he will find that it provides that the Secretary of the Interior may proceed through such other agencies, Federal or otherwise, as the Secretary of the Interior may designate, and that it is proposed, as I understand it, to proceed through the respective commissions of the two States in order to complete the area under the allocation of funds previously set aside.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Just as they have proceeded heretofore?

Mr. WEAVER. Just as they have proceeded in the case of other acquisitions.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The explanation meets the objections I have had registered with me and I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, a great many complaints have come to me concerning the bonds of the municipalities in the district which is to be taken over for the Smoky Mountains National Park. Is there some way in which we can protect the bondholders by legislation? I know of one insurance company that has some bonds of a municipality down there. Part of the municipality was taken over by the Smoky Mountains National Park. I am informed at the Interior Department that the State or the municipality had to acquire this land and that the State or municipality must retire these bonds, there being no obligation on the part of the Federal Government. This being the case, the holders of the bonds apparently have no redress after the property is made a part of the National Parks System.

Mr. WEAVER. I may say to the gentleman that that matter could not be taken care of in this legislation. As a matter of fact, the land on the North Carolina side was taken from two counties, Swain and Haywood, and, of course, this naturally withdrew some land from taxation, just like the addition of forestry land. This is a matter which will have to be considered, and I may say I have introduced a bill, which is now pending, covering this matter.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I knew that this particular bill was not the proper bill in which to include the matter, and I am glad the gentleman has introduced another bill which will protect the bondholders. I withdraw my reservation.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the author of the bill if in his opinion, even with the amendments suggested, an appropriation would not still be possible on account of the fact that the President is authorized $2,325,000 for the acquisition of land under his Executive order already; and even by inserting the amendments that have been suggested here, would it not be possible to acquire additional lands under this language: "All funds heretofore allocated and made available by Executive order or otherwise or which hereafter may be allocated for the acquisition of lands", and so forth? If it were not for the P.W.A. funds, the amendment would be all right, but in view of the P.W.A. funds you would get the appropriation anyway.

Mr. WEAVER. I think so.

Mr. GOSS. So that I would have to make the point of order against section 2 on the ground it carries an appropriation.

Mr. WEAVER. I may say to the gentleman that under the deficiency act the President, in his Executive order, as the gentleman will note, has allocated certain funds for the acquisition of lands necessary to complete the Smoky Mountains National Park under what I term the "Reforestation Act." In the deficiency act last year a certain amount of money was set aside for these purposes. The President has been very anxious to complete the purchase of this park.

Mr. GOSS. May I ask the gentleman why he is here with this bill?

Mr. WEAVER. The purpose of the bill originally was to transfer lands so acquired under the Reforestation Act in order to become a part of the national parks system.

Mr. GOSS. Section 1 will do that. Section 2 makes an appropriation. The Appropriations Committee is opposing all bills which carry appropriations from the Legislative Committee.

Mr. WEAVER. I may say that this park was undertaken to be established by Dr. Work, when he was Secretary of the Interior. We went ahead, through the two States of North Carolina and Tennessee, and North Carolina voted $2,000,000 of bonds. Tennessee did likewise, and the city of Knoxville, as I recall, contributed largely, and certain private subscriptions were taken. These were not sufficient to complete the park, whereupon the Rockefeller Foundation, in order to establish a great memorial for Laura Spellman Rockefeller, agreed to donate $5,000,000 to match the money furnished by the States and by private subscriptions.

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman is now arguing his case, and I want to make it very clear to him that I have no objection to the merits of the proposition or to having them go ahead and complete the park. My only objection is that a legislative committee has no right under the rules of the House to come in with an appropriation to do the job, and if we strike out section 2 and you get the authorization, you can then come to the Appropriations Committee, as the gentleman well knows, put your case up to them, and if, in their opinion, it is wise to spend two-million-three-hundred-odd-thousand dollars on this project now, undoubtedly they will report the money; but as one member of the permanent appropriations subcommittee of that committee, I have been asked by other members of the committee to object and use all parliamentary tactics possible to stop appropriations being made by legislative committees. It is not only the gentleman's bill that is involved but every similar bill we can find on the calendar.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Would the gentleman withdraw his objection and permit——

Mr. GOSS. I will withdraw the objection and make a point of order on section 2, I may say to the gentleman, and that would give an authorization.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman withdraw his point of order and permit the bill to be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. WEAVER. Let it go over until we can give the matter further consideration.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. So we can prepare an amendment that will meet the gentleman's objection.

Mr. GOSS. Yes; but I may suggest to the gentlemen that they will have to rewrite section 2 absolutely in order not to have an appropriation or make the money available out of funds allocated.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. That is all right.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to answer the remarks made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], for 10 minutes, after the Speaker has presented certain notes to the House.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], I shall be forced to object.

Mr. McGUGIN. You will not let me take the floor and answer a willful deliberate statement to destroy the character of a Member of the House?

Mr. TRUAX. I will let you answer when Mr. O'CONNOR is present.

Mr. McGUGIN. Am I responsible for his not being here?

Mr. TRUAX. No; but I am.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The Clerk will call the next bill.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

COOPERATIVE EFFORTS OF STATES TO PREVENT CRIME

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7353, granting the consent of Congress to any two or more States to enter into agreements or compacts for cooperative effort and mutual assistance in the prevention of crime, and for other purposes.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I understand this is one of a series of bills that has been asked by the Department of Justice.

Mr. McKEOWN. I am not so sure that this bill is included among them, but this is a bill that has been considered for some time.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does the gentleman object to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. McGUGIN. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. Speaker, I am advised they will call Mr. O'CONNOR over here, and I therefore withdraw my point of no quorum.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman has withdrawn his point of no quorum, and we are considering Calendar No. 159.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I understand this bill will authorize two States to enter into an agreement, which is prohibited under the Constitution at the present time, without authority from Congress, so that the officers of one State can go over the line and arrest, within a certain number of yards or miles, certain offenders, and that the court on either side of the State line may have jurisdiction.

I think this is very worth-while legislation and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to any two or more States to enter into agreements or compacts for cooperative effort and mutual assistance in the prevention of crime and in the enforcement of their respective criminal laws and policies, and to establish such agencies, joint or otherwise, as they may deem desirable for making effective such agreements and compacts.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SUBJECTING RECEIVERS TO STATE TAXATION

The Clerk called the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 8544, making receivers appointed by any United States courts and authorized to conduct any business or conducting any business subject to taxes levied by the State the same as if such business were conducted by private individuals or corporations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BROWN of Kentucky). Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. I want to ask the gentleman what particular class of people this bill proposes to make subject to taxation?

Mr. McKEOWN. A great many receivers in oil cases have been held by the court not liable to pay taxes. They do not pay the gasoline taxes to the State. There are thousands of dollars being lost to the State, because these receivers in gasoline and oil cases are not liable to pay those taxes. In the receivers for bank cases they do not have to pay the taxes to the State.

Mr. TRUAX. The bill is to collect taxes from corporations?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes; in cases where there are receivers appointed to run the business.

Mr. TRUAX. Well, I am heartily in favor of collecting taxes from corporations. I withdraw my objection.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any receiver appointed by any United States court who is authorized by said court to conduct any business, or who does conduct any business, shall be subject to all State and local taxes applicable to such business the same as if such business were conducted by an individual or corporation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "receiver", insert the words "liquidator, referee, trustee, or other officer or agent."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXPENSES OF REPRESENTATIVES TO MEET AT ISTANBUL, TURKEY

The Clerk called the next joint resolution on the calendar, House Joint Resolution 295, authorizing appropriation for expenses of representatives of the United States to meet at Istanbul, Turkey, with representatives of Turkish Republic for purpose of examining claims of either Government against the other, and for expense for proceedings before an umpire, if necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, this bill authorizes an appropriation of $90,000. We should have more time to consider it than is given in the consideration of this calendar. So I am constrained to object. I should like some time to be set for its consideration or take it up under suspension of the rules, by which we can have time to consider it.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I want to say this: This is for the purpose of carrying out a treaty between this country and Turkey. The treaty has been ratified. There are some 2,500 of our citizens who are interested in this claim.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, under reservation to object, I would state that I have no objection to the gentleman from Tennessee making a full and complete statement, but the last business transaction on this matter we had with Turkey was in 1923. Eventually I am going to object, because it will take $90,000 out of our Treasury, and I do not think we will ever get any of it back.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I want to say that this arbitration is for the purpose of collecting claims of our citizens, and when they are collected that amount is to be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and whatever expenses our Government is put to is to be taken out of those claims. So it does not cost the Government one cent.

Mr. TRUAX. What is the entire amount of the claims?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. About $20,000,000.

Mr. TRUAX. And of how long standing?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. 1914 to 1922.

Mr. TRUAX. Have any attempts been made to collect them before?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes; since 1923.

Mr. TRUAX. How does the gentleman expect to collect these claims now if he was not able to collect them before?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Because they did not have the treaty ratified and the agreement reached.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] knows that there has not been a thing done about this since 1923.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, what has been done?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The treaty has been ratified.

Mr. BLANTON. But that treaty of 1923 provided that it must be done within 6 months and not later than 1 year. The gentleman from Tennessee will be fair enough to admit that unless we collect something from Turkey we will be out $90,000.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Or whatever the Appropriations Committee appropriates.

Mr. BLANTON. But this bill carries $90,000.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. It only carries an authorization.

Mr. BLANTON. For $90,000.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. If necessary, it does.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows that whatever appropriation this House authorizes, the Committee on Appropriations, as its servant, will appropriate; if we pass this bill, authorizing $90,000, that sum of $90,000 will be taken out of the Treasury, and unless we make collection from Turkey of this claim running back to 1919, we will not get a cent of that $90,000 back. Under those circumstances, I am going to have to object.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor and I yielded to the gentleman from Texas to make a statement. I just want to protect my status.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. I want to ask this question of the gentleman from Tennessee, as to whether or not this appropriation provides for a commission to visit Turkey the coming season?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. In accordance with this agreement, the President has one man over there now; already there.

Mr. TRUAX. Does it take $90,000 to finance him?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. No. Let me read from what the Secretary of State had to say about this:

> Therefore, according to the terms of the notes above mentioned, the claims committee provided for therein met at Istanbul on August 15, 1933. It was decided, however, that, instead of proceeding to consider the cases on their individual merits, an effort should be made to arrange a lump sum settlement of the claims, if possible. For that purpose it was not deemed necessary to designate, as American representatives, experts in international law, and consequently the counselor and commercial attaché of the Embassy at Istanbul were so designated. After several months of negotiations, efforts to arrange a lump sum settlement proved unsuccessful.

In other words, they tried to settle it in that way so as not to have even any expense in connection with this settlement.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What is the nature of these claims? Are they war claims?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. They arose out of the war.

Mr. WOLCOTT. For the destruction of property of American citizens?

Mr. BLANTON. Back to 1914.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. From 1914 to 1922.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Now, why should the American Government appropriate $90,000 for the purpose of sending a commission to Istanbul? We have machinery set up here in Washington. If they owe these bills, it seems to me that through our consular office and their consular office they might get together and make some agreement concerning these matters.

Mr. BLANTON. And our Diplomatic Service over there is the one that should attend to it.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. These are claims where proof will have to be made. We have tried it under the Diplomatic Service. Under the treaty the President has already sent one man over there. They will have a committee from each nation and have to have an arbitrator. As to this $90,000, it says, "$90,000, or whatever is necessary." It is up to the Committee on Appropriations to have a detailed statement, if they desire, to see what is necessary. I think American citizens should be protected, and as long as we are undertaking to collect these claims for American citizens and that money is paid into the Treasury and then the expense of the collection is taken out, I can see no reason why this House should not permit that to be done.

Mr. TRUAX. Why not send a commission to France? Why not send a commission to England and Russia and every other nation?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. If I thought as my friend from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] thinks, that we would ever collect this money from Turkey for the American people, I would not hesitate to vote for this $90,000, but from my experience in watching these things for years, I do not believe we will ever get a red cent out of Turkey and that eventually we will lose this $90,000, and therefore I object.

Mr. TRUAX. And I second the objection of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

MOUNT HOOD NATIONAL FOREST

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1506, to amend the United States mining laws applicable to the Mount Hood National Forest within the State of Oregon.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GENOA INDIAN SCHOOL, NEBRASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7241, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey the lands and property used for the United States Indian school at Genoa, Nebr., to the State of Nebraska.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD]?

There was no objection.

MAMMOTH CAVE NATIONAL PARK, KY.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 4935, to amend the act of May 25, 1926, entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of the Mammoth Cave National Park in the State of Kentucky, and for other purposes."

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. The author of this bill is a member of the Appropriations Committee, which is now meeting. It is possible he is with the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, our colleague from New Mexico was called out. He will be back in a minute. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BROWN of Kentucky). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McGUGIN. A few moments ago the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] took the floor and made this statement:

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas was conscious that he was violating the rules of this House by extending his remarks——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] There is not a quorum present.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TRUAX) there were—ayes 47, noes 3.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 127]

Abernethy	Cooper, Ohio	Haines	Peterson

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty-four Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. BYRNS, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], I present a privileged resolution and move its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 333

Resolved, That J. BAYARD CLARK, of North Carolina, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing Committee of the House on Rules.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS NO. 1

Mr. McCLINTIC. By direction of the Committee on Ways and Means I present a privileged resolution and move its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 334

Resolved, That HOMER C. PARKER, of Georgia, be, and he is hereby elected Chairman of the standing Committee of the House on Elections No. 1.

The resolution was agreed to.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon the gentleman from New York made a statement which affects the integrity, character, and conduct of me individually as a Member of this House. That statement in part is as follows:

The gentleman did not at any time obtain unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. The gentleman from Kansas was conscious that he was violating the rules of the House by extending his remarks without permission. I have seldom seen such a gross violation of the rules of this House where a man deliberately and intentionally places a long extension of remarks in the RECORD without permission being granted by the House. He knew this and was attempting to perpetuate an extension which had been exhausted on the previous day.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that statement is wholly untrue.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. McGUGIN. No; I did not interfere with the gentleman from New York when he was assailing me.

Mr. Speaker, I have taken this matter up with the stenographer who took the notes, and the original notes in the book of the reporter disclose the following as a part of the proceedings of Friday, April 13:

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, upon what subject?

Mr. McGUGIN. On the attempt to curb Dr. Wirt.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none.

Mr. Speaker, it is my contention that these statements by the gentleman from New York accusing me of extending remarks without permission, and doing it deliberately, when those statements are false and the gentleman from New York could have with due diligence ascertained that they were false constitute a question of personal privilege for me to present to the House, under rule IX, which deals with this matter. It reads as follows:

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of Members, individually, in their representative capacity only.

Mr. Speaker, with the RECORD containing the statement made by the gentleman from New York, that I deliberately violated the rules of this House and deliberately slipped into the RECORD an extended speech contrary to the rules of this House, my reputation as a Member of this body is so affected that any citizen in this land, who believes I did that, has a right to believe that I am unfit to be a Member of the House. I, therefore, request the right to address the House and discuss this matter in greater detail for the usual time allotted a Member to present a question of personal privilege.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, we Members of the House feel we are entitled to rely upon the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as to what happens in this body. The reporters here are supposed to take down, as we understand there is supposed to be in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, every word uttered in this House. I have, on some occasions, insisted that that be done.

This morning's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, upon which my statement was based, contains not one word that the gentleman from Kansas——

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The gentleman is not speaking to the question of privilege.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am speaking to the question.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman is not speaking to the question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman is discussing an entirely different question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he is speaking to the question.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman from Kansas just now accused me of making a false statement. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this morning does not contain one word to the effect that the gentleman ever asked for unanimous consent to extend his remarks, that the Speaker ever recognized him, or that there was any pause. There is not on any page of the printed RECORD of this House anything to that effect, and that is why I rose here this morning.

Mr. WOODRUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM. Is it not a fact that the only authentic record this House has, and upon which it has a right to rely, is the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Exactly; the printed report of these proceedings.

Mr. WOODRUM. And the gentleman from Kansas has read some paper he has in his hand.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Which is not a record of the House and which he obtained from some stenographer in the employ of this House. If we cannot proceed with the affairs of this House and rely on the printed daily RECORD, which ultimately becomes the permanent RECORD, what is to happen?

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. In a moment. If the gentleman from Kansas had directly examined the RECORD as I had, and I twice checked and rechecked the RECORD before I made the statement, he would have risen in his place and asked unanimous consent to correct the RECORD and to insert in there the remarks he made or claimed to have made, as well as the Speaker's reply to his remarks. The gentleman has not yet made any effort to correct the permanent RECORD to show that he got unanimous consent, but the outstanding thing which still makes me doubt the authenticity of the stenographic record is that these remarks alleged to have been delivered on Friday were dated on Thursday, and I have not yet found out why they were dated back one day. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman appreciates the fact that the RECORD is very often corrected on the floor of the House. There are a great many corrections necessary to be made. The gentleman has been here long enough to know that. As a matter of fact, does not the gentleman think, considering that he made a very serious charge against a Member in his representative capacity, that he should have taken the pains to have looked up and determined if the RECORD was correct or not?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman would not do that himself.

Mr. SNELL. I do not follow the RECORD every day, but would be very careful to be sure I was right before making a serious charge.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was based on matter sent from this House to the Printing Office. The gentleman knows that he would not do that himself.

Mr. SNELL. But before such serious accusations were made I think it was up to the gentleman to have looked at the stenographer's minutes. Furthermore, considering the fact that the accusation was not correct, does not the gentleman feel that he should withdraw these remarks from the RECORD?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am rising to the point of order as to the right of the gentleman from Kansas to further address himself to the question of personal privilege, and I would like an interpretation from the Chair.

Paragraph 5 of rule XIV is in the following language:

> If a Member is called to order for words spoken in debate, the Member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk and read aloud to the House; but he shall not be held to answer, nor be subject to the censure of the House if further debate or further business has intervened.

I make the point of order that if the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN] had any right to interpose the question of privilege it was the duty of the gentleman from Kansas or some other Member of the House, at the time the offensive words were uttered by the gentleman from New York, if they were offensive, to have risen and demanded that the offensive words be taken down for determination of the House as to whether or not they should be expunged or whether or not the gentleman from New York should be allowed to speak further.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. In just a moment. I want to get in a complete statement of the point of order which I am making.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that the gentleman from Kansas did not pursue his rights. If a word offended him, or if his honor or his reputation were impugned by the language of the gentleman from New York, it was his duty under the rule I have cited to have brought the matter to an issue before the House at that time, which the gentleman either refused or declined to do. Subsequent proceedings and debate having intervened, I submit to the Chair that the gentleman from Kansas thereby waived his privilege or his right at this stage of the proceedings to rise to a question of personal privilege on the words uttered by the gentleman from New York. In other words, he had waived by his silence and by his failure to take advantage of the rights given him under the rule I have cited the privilege to raise the question, and thereby he has elected to waive his rights on a matter of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Before ruling, the Chair desires to state that earlier in the proceedings the Chair stated he would investigate whether or not the gentleman from Kansas had permission to extend in the RECORD the remarks which appeared therein.

The Chair has taken it up with the reporters of debates and finds that sheet no. 200 of the report of the debates of that day slipped out of a bundle of such sheets and was lost somewhere in the reporters' room. The reporter, who took this part of the proceedings, has brought to the Chair the original sheet, numbered 200, which reads as follows:

> Mr. MCGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.
> Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, upon what subject?
> Mr. MCGUGIN. About the attempt to curb Dr. Wirt.
> The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Chair therefore finds that the remarks complained of were properly extended in the RECORD by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the Chair yield to me to present a unanimous-consent request?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the remarks I made this morning about the gentleman from Kansas having violated the rules of the House be withdrawn from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD of today be corrected to include page 200.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, upon what subject?

Mr. McGUGIN. About the attempt to curb Dr. Wirt.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, on April 7, 1934, our highly esteemed Speaker delivered a radio address, speaking in the city of Washington to the National Democratic Club in New York City. It was a very able and instructive address, and I am sure can be read with considerable profit by the gentlemen upon the other side of the aisle.

Mr. SNELL. Nothing political in it, I presume.

Mr. BYRNS. And I ask unanimous consent to print the speech as an extension of my remarks.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it does not make any statements to the effect that the depression has not cost us anything, does it? [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS. I am sure it does not make any statement that is not justified and neither does it make any statement to the effect that the depression was caused and brought on by the last administration. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to read the report of the speech in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech of Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY, Speaker of the House of Representatives:

I am addressing this evening from the city of Washington, an audience, I am advised, of over 2,000 members of the National Democratic Club and their friends assembled tonight in the main ballroom of the Hotel Commodore in New York City. To my friends of this great organization to whom I am speaking from the Capital City, I extend greetings and best wishes, and I thank you for the opportunity you have given me to address you over the air. I congratulate all the members of the National Democratic Club upon the contributions they have made to the success of the Roosevelt administration.

An all-wise Providence calls into control, when great perils confront the Republic, the party to which we all belong. During the first Wilson administration, in spite of strenuous opposition from vested interests and from the leaders of the Republican Party, we enacted the income tax law and we established the Federal Reserve System. If the Republican Party had remained in power during these 4 years neither of these propositions would have been written into the law.

Early in the second Wilson administration we were irresistibly dragged into the awful vortex of the World War. Our first obligation was to finance the war, to organize armies, to build ships, to keep the armies of our allies in the field until our armies could get to France, and it took a lot of money to do this. During the first year of the war we expended for war purposes four times as much money as there was in existence in the United States, and as we were able to do it because we had the income-tax system and the Federal Reserve. I am wondering what would have happened to this country and to the rest of the world if the Republican Party had been in control during the 4 years covered by the first Wilson administration. Certainly we would have had neither of these propositions enacted into law, and without them the financing of the war would have been impossible.

But the second Wilson administration was followed by 12 years of undisputed control of economic policies in this country by the Republican Party. As a result of this, tariff legislation ran wild. Twice there were unconscionable revisions of tariffs upward. The Fordney-McCumber bill came soon after our control ended. Eight or nine years later came the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill, with its revisions upward. In the interval between the two bills the very rich had been relieved to a very large degree of the payment of taxes.

Against the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill, with its increases, the nations of the world protested. Over 1,200 American economists protested. The bill was brought in under a rule and passed. I recall that Germany protested. In her protest she called attention to the fact that she was paying large war indemnities; that she had a large trade with the United States; that she was one of our best customers; that she could only pay for the goods she bought of us by exchanging her own goods; and she called attention to the fact that her payments of indemnities and her payments of the amounts she was owing to our citizens could not be made if we persisted in erecting this tariff barrier. But under Republican control the bill was passed.

In 1 year the purchases of Germany from us fell 50 percent, and the purchases of other countries from us fell off in a corresponding degree. International trade commenced to fade from the seas. Retaliatory tariff barriers were built up against us until they are now as high or higher than ours. Our factories were compelled to locate in branch plants abroad, back of their tariff barriers. The goods we made here, employing our own labor, using our own capital, using our own raw materials, we commenced to make abroad, in over 1,500 branch plants, back of their tariff walls, using their labor and their raw materials.

Unemployment commenced in the land. Our foreign markets for manufactured goods were depleted; our foreign markets for pork and lard and wheat practically ceased to exist; our overproduction commenced until a time came when our granaries were full to bursting and men were starving. Our factories were mechanized as no factories in any other nation were mechanized, and yet our machinery was idle; our markets were gone; our workmen were unemployed. It is an easy thing, indeed, to compel the mechanization of European nations at our expense. All they had to do was to raise their tariffs and compel us to come over there and manufacture, and the flight of American capital commenced and still continues in alarming proportions.

It has become necessary for us now to undo, if we can, the work of the three Republican administrations; to get back for our factories and our workers as much as we can of the foreign markets we lost prior to the 4th of last March; to get back for our farmers other markets across the seas. Until that happens we are reluctantly compelled to become a smaller America. We must manufacture less in our splendidly equipped factories; we must produce less on our farms; and we must continue this reduction of production until we have restored some of the markets we have lost.

We have just passed through the lower branch of the Congress the reciprocal tariff bill which authorizes the President by reciprocal arrangements to find an outlet somewhere in the world for our surplus produce. This bill is meeting with vigorous opposition from the Republican leaders and from magazines and newspapers controlled by those who do not belong to our party. They seem to be entirely content with the fact that we have lost our markets abroad and to be violently opposed to a measure which might eventually restore them, and they are preparing, as I am advised, to carry this kind of issue into the elections this fall. No wonder the rank and file of their party is deserting a leadership which leads in the direction of economic ruin.

On the 4th day of March 1933 the country had moved irresistably for over a year in the direction of an economic collapse. If the Hoover administration had been extended until now, the collapse would have occurred. We were dangerously near it on the 4th day of March 1933. It takes time to recover from 12 years of subserviency to the great interests; it takes time to recover from the 12 years of the leadership of the big bankers and the so-called "captains of industry." It cannot be accomplished overnight.

But already the recovery program has started, and we have commenced to move, slowly perhaps, but irresistably toward a better and a brighter future.

There is a violent attempt now to discredit the Roosevelt administration and its accomplishments. I have heard of no remedial measures advocated by the partisan leaders who are attacking the Democratic leadership which would supplant or modify the things we are trying to do in order to carry out our program of recovery. A leadership which merely attacks and does not propose remedies will not get very far with the electorate at the present time.

GENERAL EXPENDITURES OF THE GOVERNMENT

It is, perhaps, desirable to examine now into the economies which have been accomplished by the Roosevelt administration.

I find that during the 13 months covering the period from February 28, 1933, to March 31, 1934, the general expenditures of the Government amounted, in round numbers, to $2,911,000,000. Taking as a comparable period the period of the Hoover administration extending from January 31, 1932, to February 28, 1933, the general expenditures of the Government were $3,550,000,000. Both periods were periods of depression, but during the 13 months of the Roosevelt administration we accomplished a substantial reduction of the general expenditures of the Government.

Perhaps the figures are not exactly comparable; there were certain expenditures which were included in general expenditures during a part of the 13-month period of the Hoover administration and which are now carried as emergency expenditures, but the figures I have given show that during the 13 months of the Roosevelt administration we made a considerably better showing than was made during the 13 comparable months which preceded it.

The war we are waging now against depression is more serious even than the World War. It is not as easy now to inspire patriotic cooperation from people of the United States as it was when bands were playing and khaki-clad soldiers were marching and news of victories were coming in from the battlefields of France. This is not the time "to rock the boat." This is not the time to try to sabotage recovery measures. Conditions were bad enough during the Hoover administration, and no remedies were applied. The people of the country, I do not think, can be persuaded that they want to return to the old conditions which existed then.

It has been charged that this administration is recklessly expending money, that it is piling up an enormous national debt, and the time has perhaps come to analyze the recovery expenditures of the first year of operations under the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Apparently during 13 months of operation under the new deal the gross amount of our public debt increased $5,223,000,000 until on the 31st day of last month our apparent public debt amounted to $26,158,000,000. But we had in the Treasury at that time $2,008,000,000 which ought to be deducted in arriving at the amount of our gross public debt. Deducting this amount, we reach the inevitable conclusion that in the first 13 months of the Roosevelt administration our public debt increased only $2,436,000,000.

We have been underwriting investments of banks, insurance companies, railroads, building-and-loan associations, farmers, intermediate credit banks, joint-stock land banks, and other companies and banks, and we have taken from them their securities. We have been underwriting municipalities and we have taken from them their securities. If the recovery program succeeds—and it must succeed—practically all these amounts so invested will come back into the Treasury of the United States.

THE NATIONAL DEBT

Using a new method of approaching the national debt, in view of the vigorous criticisms to which the present administration has been subjected, a different result is obtained. If we have been underwriting the propositions I have mentioned, and if we have been taking their securities, and if the success of the new deal means the payment of these obligations—and it does mean the payment of these obligations—then the correct way of approaching the national debt is to deduct from our entire national indebtedness the cash we have on hand, less the securities we are underwriting, and when we do that we reach the conclusion that at the present time our public debt, less cash and securities, amounts to only $8,264,000,000. Applying the same method to our public debt as it existed on February 28, 1933, we reach the conclusion that our public debt at that time amounted to $6,225,000,000. Therefore, during the 13 months of the Roosevelt administration the public debt increased only $2,039,000,000.

It is perfectly proper, I think, in estimating our financial condition so far as the national debt is concerned, to figure in the $2,810,000,000 of increment on gold we have obtained by revaluing the gold dollar. When this item is included, we reach the inevitable and startling conclusion that today our public debt, less cash and securities, is $771,000,000 less than it was at the end of the Hoover administration.

During the limited time I have at my disposal tonight it is impossible for me to discuss the progress of our recovery program.

THE LEADERSHIP OF DR. WIRT

Just at the present time the leadership of the Republican Party seems to center in Dr. William A. Wirt, a school teacher, who lives in Gary, Ind., and who, it is charged, receives a considerable part of his compensation there from the Gary steel companies. He has charged that there is a planned revolution going on in the Government; that certain men high in the councils of the administration have stated that they are planning and carrying on a revolution which means that Mr. Roosevelt is the Kerensky of a movement soon to be supplanted by a Stalin and by communism.

An investigation which will start on Tuesday of next week will demonstrate completely and quickly the absurdity of statements of this character. There is no revolution in this country. Our capitalistic form of government is not in the slightest danger. All this kind of talk is silly and absurd, and the investigation which will soon start will demonstrate in a short time the mean, partisan, and unpatriotic motives which inspired statements of this character. But these irresponsible statements are seized upon by certain newspapers and magazines and certain leaders of the other party as a reason for completely destroying the Roosevelt recovery program.

If there is a revolution, there is a revolution against the methods exercised by the Republican Party in 12 years preceding the present administration; if there is a revolution, it is a revolution against the kind of leadership we had which led us directly into the depression we are now trying to get out of. The leadership of that period has gone—God grant it may never return.

The people of this country will not support a movement which means that our efforts toward recovery will be abandoned. The conditions of uncertainty and despair which prevailed 13 months ago must not be permitted to return. This is the mission of such organizations as the National Democratic Club.

GENERAL AND EMERGENCY EXPENDITURES, FEBRUARY 28, 1933, TO MARCH 31, 1934

During the above-mentioned period of time for emergency relief measures we have expended $1,719,000,000, of which the largest amount has gone to the C.W.A., to wit, $603,000,000.

The general expenditures for carrying on the Government during that period of time have amounted to $2,911,000,000, a considerable reduction over prior years, showing the effect of the economy program of the Federal Government.

During the first year of the Roosevelt administration the securities carrying the obligations of carriers under the Transportation Act of 1920 decreased $1,000,000,000.

Notes of the Federal Farm Board, evidencing outstanding advances under the Agricultural Marketing Act, decreased $289,000,000.

Securities received by the United States Shipping Board on account of sales of ships decreased $7,000,000.

Crop loans to farmers decreased $4,000,000. Farmers' seed loans decreased $18,000. The obligations of agricultural stabilization corporations decreased $25,000,000. The obligations of cooperative marketing associations decreased $55,000,000.

The securities accepted by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation during the period from February 28, 1933, to March 31, 1934, amounted to $59,000,000. Of course, there were no securities of this kind accepted under the Hoover administration.

The securities of production credit corporations amounted to $90,000,000. Of course, there were no securities of this kind under the Hoover administration. The securities taken by the banks for cooperatives during the period we are discussing amounted to $110,000,000. Of course, there was nothing of this kind under the Hoover administration. The securities accepted by the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation amounted to $200,000,000. Of course, there was nothing of this kind under the Hoover administration.

Capital-stock subscriptions for the Tennessee Valley Authority amounted to $4,000,000.

The capital-stock subscriptions for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation amounted to $150,000,000.

Subscriptions to the capital stock of the regional agricultural credit corporations increased by $1,000,000. The subscriptions to the paid-in surplus of land banks amounted to $27,000,000.

I have not, of course, attempted to give all the items which go to make up the expenditures of the new deal. In brief, I might say that the total capital-stock subscriptions of the Government during the present administration amounted to $1,027,000,000. The securities held by emergency organizations increased during the Roosevelt administration $957,000,000.

GOLD BONUS

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I wish to call your attention to the manner in which the Nation's gold has been juggled in the interest of certain individuals who have been profiteering and racketeering in the so-called "Gold bonus."

By payment of a premium, or bonus, of $14 an ounce we have bought during the present month over $300,000,000 of European gold, and it is still coming at the rate of about $10,000,000 daily.

Out of a Treasury deficit we are paying $35 an ounce for gold normally worth $20.67 an ounce.

Between March and October last this $300,000,000 of gold left the United States bound for Europe at the regular market price of around $20.67. We are now buying it back at $35—or at a loss of $14 an ounce—and calling this "financial recovery."

Of this $300,000,000 of American gold which we shipped to Europe during the March–October period last year, over $240,000,000 went to France, over $40,000,000 to England, and the balance to Belgium, Holland, Germany, and Switzerland, as you will note in the last issue of the Federal Reserve Bulletin.

Europe got most of this gold at the market price of $20.67 and now is sending it back at $35, after realizing a bonus profit of $14 an ounce, or an aggregate profit of over $100,000,000.

It would be interesting to know who and how many American international bankers, brokers, importers, and exporters were parties to this gold-profiteering deal.

It behooves the Government to know if the profiteers are paying income taxes on their gold profiteering—or are among the big tax evaders.

Take Morgan & Co., the world's leading banking house in floating foreign loans in the United States, and then advising the Government to cancel the foreign loans. During the past 3 years, according to their testimony before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, they paid taxes in England and France but no income taxes in the United States. They have the name of being the leading house in the international movement of gold and securities between this country and Europe.

Take the New York Times Index in the Library of Congress and note the movements of J. Pierpont Morgan, the head of the Morgan House, from July to October.

On July 13 Morgan sailed for London, where his firm has the Morgan & Grenfell Bank. Grenfell, the leading British partner, is member of Parliament for the London district and a director in the Bank of England. Morgan & Grenfell are fiscal agents of the Bank of England.

Across the channel in Paris the Morgan partners own the big French bank of Morgan et Cie. The French partners are high in the councils of the French Government. In both France and London the Morgan House pays income taxes—which they escape in the United States. Al Capone pays income taxes in the United States, or goes to jail; but the Morgan partners neither pay taxes nor go to jail. How do they do it? What is their pull?

Well, J. Pierpont Morgan sailed for London on July 13.

On July 14 Morgan was eulogized by the London Times—which used to be called the "Thunderer"—for his great services to the Allied Powers in floating American loans abroad. Now $11,000,000,000 of these European loans are still due the United States Treasury; and London, Paris, and the House of Morgan are agreed that these $11,000,000,000 shall forever remain due until paid off by American taxpayers.

On arrival in London, Mr. Morgan's first engagement, according to the New York Times cable of July 20, was with M. C. Norman, of the Bank of England, on the subject matter in which the White House was about to embark, namely, "to discuss currency stabilization."

Mr. Morgan remained in London and Paris several weeks. He was a busy man, trying to help Uncle Sam stabilize, or unstabilize, the currency. Doubtless he was at home there, because his chapter in British Who's Who says that he has a London mansion and also a fine estate at Herefordshire, 20 miles out of London.

But when Morgan has been in London just 1 week and looked the financial ground over, behold Bernard M. Baruch, the Wall Street broker, is also called to London and Paris. Mr. Baruch is likewise deeply concerned in the welfare of American finance—as witness the fact that he loaned the services of his valued assistant, General Johnson, to the Government to run both the industries and the commerce of the United States as Chief Administrator of the N.R.A.

Mr. Baruch arrives in Paris on July 27, and takes pains to announce that his trip is purely private. But he is in the capital of Czechoslovakia during the week when that country issues a new gold-bond issue, and back in London as the guest of Winston Churchill to discuss the subject of currency inflation.

American gold at this time—July and August 1933—is pouring abroad at a lively pace. To France alone went $79,600,000 in July, $73,200,000 in August, and $48,700,000 in September—or $200,000,000 in 90 days. This same $200,000,000, or its bullion equivalent, have come back, earning a bonus of $14 an ounce for somebody, or a net profit of around $75,000,000 for the French-British-Wall Street profiteers.

This gold profit of over $75,000,000 was just so much loss to the United States Treasury—or Treasury deficit—which will be saddled on American taxpayers along with the wreck of the $11,000,000,000 of war-loan charity to European war powers.

Well, Morgan and Baruch came back, and then came the gold-bonus program of the Treasury—the business of buying back at $34 to $35 an ounce in the wintertime the gold which, at $20.67 an ounce, we had sent to Europe in the summertime.

For that business the White House had to have in the Treasury a man even more dependable than the great violinist Mr. Woodin—even though the latter was able to buy stocks of Morgan & Co. at a rate $13 below the market price.

Destiny, or something of the kind, now came looming. The front pages of the Wall Street press carried the photographs of Henry Morgenthau, Jr., side by side with the President. Also, Henry Morgenthau, Sr., came back from Europe with wise advice on currency stabilization. Something was about to happen.

October finds American gold exports barred, gold premiums paid for imports, and Henry Morgenthau, Jr., Acting Secretary of the Treasury—and a military censorship guarding the secrets.

Come the ides of November. Bernard M. Baruch is here to entertain his assistant, Brigadier General Johnson, while giving the Saturday Evening Post a broadside on the subject of gold and inflation.

The press of November 17 advises the world that John Pierpont Morgan is a guest of the White House.

The press of November 18, or the following day after Morgan's arrival, announces that Henry Morgenthau, Jr., is sworn in as Secretary of the Treasury.

The press of November 22 announces the Treasury censorship order; and on the 23d the Treasury order is issued that all Treasury guards shall obey military rules.

It would seem the duty of Congress to initiate a thoroughgoing investigation of the entire gold-bonus and gold-profiteering trade. But if the Treasury is working under a military rule of secrecy with regard to gold movements and gold premiums, and by terms of the recent Gold Act does not report to Congress during the next 2 years, it looks as though we are hog-tied and hamstrung so far as the Treasury gold deal is concerned.

We seem to be lucky that the censorship does not cover the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the proceedings of Congress. We can encourage the Department of Justice, but the Department of Justice is likely to bring out an opinion that the whole deal is strictly regular and legal and in accord with the Constitution of the United States, if not with the Declaration of Independence.

There seems to be one cheerful side to this business of paying bankers a bonus of $14 an ounce for its gold production, and that is, the benefit it may do to the gold mines and markets of the British possessions. British countries, Africa, Australia, India, and Canada, turn out three fourths of the world's gold. Of $480,000,000 of gold mined by the world last year, the British possessions yielded about $350,000,000.

Our Treasury premium of $14 an ounce has been a great boon to the gold mines of Johannesburg, Australia, and Ontario. It has boomed the world stock markets in British gold mining shares, and helped British recovery, although at the expense of American taxpayers. It may be—who knows?—that Great Britain in return may offer to pay the Treasury as much as 10 percent of its next coming installment of unpaid war debt.

It may be tough on American taxpayers, but if it helps London and Johannesburg it may help to keep Morgan and his brokers out of worse mischief. Moreover, if we cannot make the House of Morgan pay income taxes over here, we can at least pile up his British profits so they can soak him for income taxes over there. And our "brain trust" shall not have lived in vain.

Finally, the significance of our midsummer gold shipments to France do not become a stand-out in a Shakespearean sense, unless we take note of the difference between the May-June shipments before, and the July-August shipments, after Morgan, Baruch, and Morgenthau, Sr., the three wise crows of high finance, visit London and Paris on the patriotic mission of stabilizing currency.

United States gold shipments to France, 1933 (net)

May	$122,000
June	72,000
July	79,617,000
August	73,173,000

That is to say, before our Wall Street pilgrims' visit over there our gold shipments to France were only in thousands, whereas after they got over there the shipments jump to millions.

Our June net gold shipments to France are $72,000. Our July net gold shipments to France are $79,617,000.

The May-June shipments combined are less than $200,000. The July-August shipments combined exceed $150,000,000. What happened?

In fact, two big things happened. First, Morgan, Baruch, and Morgenthau, Sr., our ambassadors of currency stabilization—speaking in the Greek sense of "Augean stables"—start for Europe.

Brigadier General Johnson, "assistant to Bernard M. Baruch", as termed in the N.R.A. handbook, begins his big street parades and his cracker-down orations and price codes.

In other words, while Morgan, Baruch, and Morgenthau, Sr., are leading the golden calf and persuading it to go to Paris, Cracker-Down Johnson is shooing it from behind and cracking at its heels with all the codes and brass bands he can lay his hands on. This much credit must be given to Johnson: He was an able assistant in driving that $300,000,000 golden calf to Europe last summer. It must be said for Baruch and Morgan that they chose a good assistant both in putting over the draft act in the World War and in the present moving picture, entitled "The Golden Calf of Our Augean Stable."

LIGHT-STATION RESERVATION, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7744, to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to transfer to the city of Bridgeport, Conn., a certain unused light-station reservation.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is authorized on behalf of the United States to convey to the city of Bridgeport, in the county of Fairfield, State of Connecticut, a certain island known as "Fayerweather Island", which has been used as the Black Rock Light Station Reservation and which has heretofore been leased to said city of Bridgeport by the United States for use as a public park.

A portion of Fayerweather Island was conveyed to the United States by deed dated June 17, 1807, from Nicholas Fish to the United States of America, and described as follows:

That certain piece or parcel of land lying in the town of Fairfield, in the said State of Connecticut, known and called the "Fayerweather Island" and which forms the outer side of the "Black Rock Harbor", so called, and the same is bounded northerly on Black Rock Harbor, westerly on the mouth of said harbor, southeasterly on the sea beach or Long Island Sound, and northeasterly on the beach including the rocky point thereof adjoining the said island, and is about 8 acres in quantity, be the same more or less, which deed is recorded in volume 32, page 545, and in book B, page 43, of the town of Fairfield.

And the remaining portion of said island was conveyed to the United States by deed dated July 10, 1807, from Daniel Fayerweather to the United States of America, one undivided half of a certain piece of land in quantity about 8 acres in the whole piece, be the same more or less, and which piece of land lies in the town of Fairfield, in said county, and is known and called by the name of "Fayerweather Island", and the whole of said land is bounded northerly on Black Rock Harbor, westerly on the mouth of said harbor, easterly on the sea or Long Island Sound, northeasterly on the beach including the rocky point thereof adjoining said premises, which deed is recorded in volume 32, page 25, and in book B, page 44, of the town of Fairfield.

Said deed from the United States shall convey all of said property to said city in perpetuity and shall provide that it shall always be used and maintained by said city as a public park.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: On page 3, line 8, after the word "park", strike out the period, insert a comma and the following language: "And if at any time the city discontinues the maintenance of said property as a public park, then the same shall revert to the Government of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT BUILDING

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8889, to provide for the custody and maintenance of the United States Supreme Court Building and the equipment and grounds thereof.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] for an explanation of section 2, which provides that employees shall be appointed by the Architect with the approval of the Chief Justice.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, with reference to section 2, the gentleman will notice from the report that this follows very closely the method of appointment of employees in general with reference to the buildings of the Capitol group, and it was thought that the curb of the approval of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court should be placed upon the power of the Architect of the Capitol to make these appointments.

Mr. TRUAX. Has this been the former custom?

Mr. LANHAM. I understand it has been.

Mr. TRUAX. Is the gentleman positive about that?

Mr. LANHAM. Insofar as customs are analogous with reference to the buildings of the Capitol group. In many instances appointments of this character are made simply upon the authority of the Architect of the Capitol. For instance, with reference to the Library, the appointments as to mechanical and structural care are made in this way, and the Architect of the Capitol has less restricted authority than here proposed. The Architect of the Capitol is the executive officer of this Commission. The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States is the chairman of the Commission. So it was contemplated that the appointments concerning structural and mechanical care should be made through the Architect of the Capitol, but with the sanction of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

Mr. TRUAX. Are the appointments made from the Civil Service list?

Mr. LANHAM. Some of them, perhaps, but as provided in this bill they will be under the classification and retirement acts.

I may say to the gentleman that the purpose of the bill is this: Under the terms of the contract the Supreme Court Building will be completed in December of this year. From the 1st of January 1935, when it is anticipated the occupancy of the building will begin, until the close of the fiscal year maintenance and care of the building naturally will be necessary. There is no predicate in law for employees to be appointed for this purpose, and the object of this bill is to get a legal predicate upon which the estimates may be presented to the Appropriations Committee, so that an item for the necessary care of the building may be included in the deficiency bill.

Mr. TRUAX. How many employees will there be?

Mr. LANHAM. From the standpoint of mechanical care and maintenance, from the Architect of the Capitol, 33 employees. That is for the structural and mechanical care and maintenance. Then for the Supreme Court, it is estimated there will be for the first quarter of 1935, 29 employees, and for the second quarter 73 employees. That is, there will be fewer for the first 3 months.

Mr. TRUAX. And these employees are all under the civil-service rules.

Mr. LANHAM. Many of them are not.

Mr. TRUAX. Section 2 (b) provides that the employees shall be compensated under the Classification Act of 1923, and shall be subject to retirement.

Mr. LANHAM. That is similar to the usual provision for employees in the Capitol group.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, in view of the explanation of the gentleman, I withdraw my reservation of an objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I renew the reservation to object. The number of personnel that is to be appointed, both as to the structural care and also with reference to the custodial care under this bill, is unlimited. It is left absolutely to the judgment and discretion of the Architect of the Capitol. There can be no question about that. And we must have some understanding as to the number of new employees who are to be appointed.

In the first place, that building is four times as large as it should have been. It is going to be a standing monument of extravagance that will rest heavily on the shoulders of this Congress for the next 100 years. There could be put in that building not merely the present personnel of 52 high-salaried employees but also the 33 new employees in charge of the structural care, and eventually the 79 new employees in charge of the custodial care, but likewise an additional large number, for if whoever has charge saw fit they could, under the authority of this bill, put 2,000 people in charge of it, because you can house that many in this tremendous building and lose most of them.

Although the Architect of the Capitol is a splendid man, and my personal friend, I am not willing to leave this unlimited authority to the discretion of anybody. David Lynn, the Architect of the Capitol, in whom we all have full confidence, may die tomorrow, the same as any of us, and a new man be put in his place. Hence we must have a distinct understanding about the number of new employees and the amounts of their salaries before we pass this bill.

This is something over which this Congress should retain control. We should know something about what we are doing, and retain the purse strings in our own hands. There is nothing in this bill as to the fixing of salaries—all compensation and salaries are fixed automatically by the name of the position held by the employee. If you designate an employee by a certain name, the salary is so much. If the name of the class is changed overnight, the salary could be doubled automatically under the act of 1923.

My good friend from Texas, chairman of the committee, is so good, so generous, so liberal, so good-natured that I am afraid he has let someone put something over on him in this bill; and for the present, until we get limitations in it, and proper restrictions, until we get a provision to retain control in Congress over the matter, I shall be forced to object.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. LANHAM. May I say, with reference to the imputation of my colleague, that this Commission has operated in accordance with the direction from the Congress. It has operated very efficiently and faithfully, and without any change from the very beginning. It has operated so economically that out of the original appropriation under which it was contemplated only that the building should be constructed, the Commission has saved enough money to furnish and equip the Supreme Court Building of the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. In just a moment. I would like to reply to some of the things my colleague has stated. I have here detailed information prepared for the Committee on Appropriations with reference to each and every one of these employees, the duties they are to perform, and the amounts they are to receive.

These matters have been in the contemplation of the Supreme Court Building Commission and also of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which I have the honor to be chairman. This comes as a unanimous report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds after a very careful and thorough hearing.

The urgency of this matter is this: That there must be some authority of law upon which to predicate the appropriations here contemplated in the deficiency bill in order that the Supreme Court Building may be taken care of from the 1st of January until the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman give us some information that we want?

Mr. LANHAM. Just one thing more.

Mr. BLANTON. But I want some information.

Mr. LANHAM. I think I have all the information here.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman give it to me?

Mr. LANHAM. I will gladly give the gentleman anything I have.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the breakdown of these employees—these 33 new structural employees? How do their salaries run?

Mr. LANHAM. There are 33. I can give the gentleman each and every one. The first is clerk, storekeeper, and timekeeper. His duties are——

Mr. BLANTON. What is his salary?

Mr. LANHAM. The yearly salary for that service is $1,620. The estimate which will be before the Appropriations Committee is for $810 for the 6 months.

Mr. BLANTON. How do the other salaries range? From what to what? What is the maximum?

Mr. LANHAM. An engineer at $2,400 a year; a plumber at $2,000 a year; air-conditioning engineer at $2,000 a year; 3 electricians at $2,000, $1,860, and $1,200, respectively; elevator mechanic at $1,860; assistant elevator mechanic at $1,320; special laborer at $1,320.

I think the gentleman will see that these are not unreasonable sums to pay these men.

Mr. BLANTON. But they are all for one building?

Mr. LANHAM. I understand they are all for one building, and they are for a building constructed under the authorization of Congress, to house one of the three coordinate branches of the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad that none of the 33 will receive more than $2,400 per annum. At the end of December 1934, when the Supreme Court moves into that building, what will it have cost us—the complete building?

Mr. LANHAM. The original appropriation for the building, as I recall, for the purchase of land, razing of the buildings, and the construction of this building was $9,740,000. I will again call the gentleman's attention to the fact that out of that the Commission is saving enough money to furnish and equip the building.

Mr. BLANTON. I would rather have my friend answer my question and tell me what the building will have cost?

Mr. LANHAM. I do not think the gentleman has asked one question that I have not answered.

Mr. BLANTON. I asked the gentleman to tell us what this building will have cost at the end of this year.

Mr. LANHAM. And I have told the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman gave us the amount appropriated.

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. But what will it cost us? Will it cost all of the appropriation?

Mr. LANHAM. I have not at hand the exact figure as to the difference, but the difference in the saving will furnish and equip that large building so that we shall not be back here to the Congress asking for an additional amount to furnish and equip.

Mr. BLANTON. As I understand it, then, the full appropriation of $9,740,000 will be spent for the plant, considering the fact that part of it will be used for equipment.

Mr. LANHAM. And furnishings. I assume that is correct. There may be a saving even after that.

Mr. BLANTON. And after the first 3 months there will be over 100 new Supreme Court employees in charge of that building?

Mr. LANHAM. After the first 3 months very slightly over that; yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And they will be in addition to all the present 52 Supreme Court employees that we now have?

Mr. LANHAM. They will be largely additional, yes; with the exception of the engineer, who will go from this building over there, because the men will still be necessary in the Capitol to operate elevators, and so forth, just as they have been heretofore.

Mr. BLANTON. Is my friend from Texas willing to turn over to one man, I do not care who he is, the appointment of these 100 new employees? A man who is not connected with Congress, except as an employee of the Congress?

Mr. LANHAM. With reference to other buildings of the Capitol group, that is largely the system in vogue. This provides also for the additional sanction of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. That matter was very, very carefully discussed in the committee. I should like to direct my colleague's attention to the hearings which we conducted on this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say to my colleague that when he is willing to do that he is willing to confer on our good friend, David Lynn, a greater privilege than any Member of Congress enjoys. There is not a Member of Congress who has had the privilege of appointing 100 employees of this Government. Very little consideration in that respect has been given to Members of this House. I want to see some loyal Democrats get jobs.

Mr. LANHAM. But it is no greater privilege than the Architect of the Capitol has had with reference to his establishment for many, many years. There have been, as I recall, since the beginning of the Government only seven architects of the Capitol.

Mr. BLANTON. So long as David Lynn is Architect of the Capitol I would have no objection whatever. He is my personal friend, and I have absolute confidence in him.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. For the present I am going to have to object.

FEDERAL MEMORIAL COMMISSION AT OR NEAR ST. LOUIS, MO.

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 302, authorizing the creation of a Federal memorial commission, to consider and formulate plans for the construction, on the western bank of the Mississippi River, at or near the site of old St. Louis, Mo., of a permanent memorial to the men who made possible the territorial expansion of the United States, particularly President Thomas Jefferson and his aides, Livingston and Monroe, who negotiated the Louisiana Purchase, and to the great explorers, Lewis and Clark, and the hardy hunters, trappers, frontiersmen, and pioneers and others who contributed to the territorial expansion and development of the United States of America.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman from Missouri if this does not call for an appropriation?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I want to be frank with the gentleman from California. An association in my city, St. Louis, through its officers, approached me and asked me to introduce a resolution calling for an appropriation from the Federal Government of $36,000,000 to construct a memorial in St. Louis on the river bank in honor of Thomas Jefferson and the Louisiana Purchase. The mayor of my city and other gentlemen, prominent citizens, made this request. I told them that I did not want to introduce such a resolution; that I knew it had absolutely no chance to pass. They insisted that the resolution be introduced. I introduced it; and on the day I introduced it I gave a statement to the press in my city practically ridiculing the idea of asking an appropriation of such amount from the Congress for a memorial, calling their attention to the cost of the Lincoln Memorial, to the cost of the Washington Monument, and to the cost of other memorials that the Government has constructed. I suggested to them that they organize in the area covering the Louisiana Purchase, that they bring in all the States and provide for a fitting memorial, but not to ask the Government of the United States to construct it. They took my advice and drew a second resolution, which does not obligate the Government in any manner, shape, or form; and it is the second resolution that is under consideration at the present time.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Does not the gentleman think this is the opening wedge?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I shall not try to deceive the gentleman from California by saying that it is not. I presume that some day this organization may return to the Congress and ask for a reasonable appropriation; but if I happen to be here at that time I assure the gentleman as far as I personally am concerned I should not ask for the appropriation of more than a limited amount, probably such an amount as the Congress provided for the construction of the George Rogers Clark Memorial in Indiana, to be used together with the amount which might be collected by this association from the various States covered by the Louisiana Purchase.

I may say that in the last session a resolution was passed by the House by unanimous consent for the appointment of a commission to study the feasibility of constructing a memorial in North Carolina on the site where the first American white child was born. I would ask the gentleman from California if the birth of the first American child is of sufficient importance to authorize the appointment of a commission to study the question of constructing a memorial, does not the gentleman from California think the great Louisiana Purchase is also entitled to some recognition?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, in view of the gentleman's statement and admission that this is the opening wedge for an appropriation in the neighborhood of $30,000,000, I feel constrained to object.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I wish the gentleman would not phrase the grounds of his objection in just that way. I made no such admission.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California should not make the statement that the passage of this resolution means at some future date an appropriation of $30,000,000. I have frankly told the gentleman that if I am a Member of this body when the time comes to secure the participation of the Government I should not ask for more than one or two million dollars. In view of what the Congress has done in the past, who is it that will say that a memorial should not be erected to commemorate the purchase of that great strip of ground that ultimately resulted in the United States securing all the land west of the Mississippi River.

Of course, you all recall the appropriations for the George Rogers Clark Memorial in Indiana. This memorial before it was completed cost the Government nearly $2,000,000. I do not recall any serious objection to that appropriation from the Republican side of the House. My good friend, the late Will Wood, as Chairman of our Appropriations Committee, coming from Indiana, had no trouble getting one appropriation, but secured three, if I am correct, while in the Senate former Senator Watson, also of Indiana, at that time the Republican leader in the Senate, took care of the appropriations at the other end of the Capitol.

This resolution, which at this time carries no authorization or appropriation, passed the Senate at the time it was reported by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. There was no discussion in the other body. I am not going to try and deceive you; of course, some day this association will undoubtedly return and ask for a reasonable amount—but please forget the $30,000,000 that was in the original resolution. Why should the Government not be represented in such an undertaking? I propose to try and secure the passage of the resolution 2 weeks from today, and I hope my friend from Pennsylvania will give some thought to this matter in the meantime.

JOHN C. MERRIAM

The Clerk called the next resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 70, to provide for the reappointment of John C. Merriam as a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than Members of Congress, caused by the expiration of the term of John C. Merriam, of the city of Washington, on December 20, 1933, be filled by the reappointment of the recent incumbent (John C. Merriam) for the statutory term of 6 years.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CUSTODY AND MAINTENANCE OF SUPREME COURT BUILDING

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill (H.R. 8889) to provide for the custody and maintenance of the United States Supreme Court Building and the equipment and grounds thereof, introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to the Architect of the Capitol about this bill providing for the custody and maintenance of the United States Supreme Court Building and the equipment and grounds thereof, and have been assured that the salaries that are mentioned in his report will be kept in line, and will not be raised. I was afraid they might be fixed in sums comparable to salaries paid present employees of the Supreme Court.

Here is what the present personnel of the Supreme Court costs us in salaries: The Chief Justice and 8 Associate Justices $180,500; 13 law and stenographic clerks to justices, $45,950; the Marshal, $5,500; Librarian, $4,500; Chief Clerk, $4,200; attendant, $2,030; mounted messenger, $1,730; 9 messengers at $1,850 each, $16,650; 1 messenger for conference room, $1,850; 2 messengers for Marshal's office, $3,460; 2 doorkeepers, $3,460; 2 messenger-doorkeepers, $3,460; 1 messenger, robing room, $1,730; 1 skilled laborer, $1,140; 4 pages, $3,740; the reporter, $8,000; editorial assistant, $3,850; stenographic clerk, $3,000.

I am of the opinion that the above present force certainly ought to be sufficient for one Supreme Court of nine members. I am afraid that the unwarranted extravagance of spending $9,740,000 for this new building has caused this unwarranted proposal to add 103 new employees to the personnel of the Supreme Court, additional to the 52 employees specified above, just to take care of this monstrosity. I am ashamed of this extravagance. If there were any way to stop this bill finally, I would stop it. There are too many employees. But I realize that eventually it will be passed. Objecting to it now merely delays for a few days its passage. Either it will be called up and passed under suspension of rules, or else a rule will be granted. Realizing that I cannot stop it, and having had an understanding with the chairman of the committee, and with the Architect of the Capitol, that these salaries will not be raised, I am going to withdraw the objection I made a while ago.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman from Texas based his objection upon the fact that the bill put such great power into the hands of one man, to wit, the making of more than 100 appointments.

Mr. BLANTON. That was one objection. But it is too late now to change the mode of appointment. I have been assured that the Supreme Court will keep these salaries in line and not permit them to be raised.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Certainly.

Mr. LANHAM. I may state that 79 of these appointments will be made as they always have been made, with the approval of the Supreme Court. The Architect of the Capitol has nothing to do with them.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is aware of the power this puts in the hands of one man, is he?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and I do not like it, but we cannot stop it. I have looked into the matter and have been assured that proper control of salaries will be exercised. We can gain nothing by objecting, as it would merely postpone its passage for a few days.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Architect of the Capitol shall have charge of the structural and mechanical care of the United States Supreme Court Building, including the care and maintenance of the grounds, and the supplying of all mechanical furnishings and mechanical equipment for the building. The operation and maintenance of the mechanical equipment and repair of the building shall be performed under his direction and he is authorized to enter into all necessary contracts.

SEC. 2. Employees required for the performance of the foregoing shall be (a) appointed by the Architect of the Capitol with the approval of the Chief Justice of the United States; (b) compensated in accordance with the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 5, ch. 13); and (c) be subject to the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes", approved May 22, 1920, as amended (U.S.C., supp. VI, title 5, ch. 14).

SEC. 3. All other duties and work required for the operation, domestic care, and custody of the building shall be performed under the direction of the Marshal of the Supreme Court of the United States, who shall be superintendent of the United States Supreme Court Building, and employees (including elevator operators) required for the performance of such duties shall be appointed by the Marshal with the approval of the Chief Justice.

SEC. 4. Appropriations for the work under the jurisdiction of the Architect of the Capitol shall be disbursed by the Marshal as the Chief Justice may direct upon certified vouchers submitted by the Architect of the Capitol.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STONE MARKER JEFFERSON DAVIS NATIONAL HIGHWAY

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 248, to authorize the erection on public grounds in the District of Columbia of a stone marker designating the zero milestone of the Jefferson Davis National Highway.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I withhold my objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not see any reason why this should not be granted. It does not cost the Government anything. It is granting only what has been granted before. It seems to me that since we have a Jefferson Davis Memorial Highway, it is reasonable to have a zero milestone from which to measure the distance.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in back of the White House at the present time there is a zero marker for all highways in the United States. I cannot but believe that this is approached in a manner different from the way we usually approach the situation. Why does not the gentleman come in here and ask authority of this Congress to erect a memorial to Jefferson Davis in the District of Columbia?

Mr. KELLER. We do not ask for any such thing.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It amounts to the same thing, and it is for that reason I object.

MONUMENT IN MEMORY OF COL. ROBERT INGERSOLL

The Clerk called the next resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 21, authorizing the erection in Washington, D.C., of a monument in memory of Col. Robert Ingersoll.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I withhold my objection.

Mr. KELLER. The request is made for authority to place a monument to Robert G. Ingersoll, one of the great orators of our country, and especially of my State, in the District of Columbia. Mr. Ingersoll is recognized the world over as one of the world's great orators, and I do not see any reason why this request should not be granted. I should like to hear the gentleman's reaction to the resolution, if he has no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not hesitate to state the reasons I have for objecting to this bill. I do not object merely for the purpose of defeating the gentleman's resolution, and I would not object unless I had a sufficient reason. In my opinion and in my study and from a reading of Robert Ingersoll's works, I personally recognize that he was a great orator. He was a great writer. I personally have enjoyed his writings, but I do not think he is the kind of a man that we should honor by putting up a monument in the National Capital to his memory. Although a great many people think Robert Ingersoll was an atheist and that some of his writings were atheistic, we know that before he died he partially repudiated his atheistic utterances and agreed that there might be a Supreme Being. I do not believe it is proper to build a memorial to Robert Ingersoll in the National Capital as an example to the youth of this country that Robert Ingersoll's works are to be used as textbooks to regulate their mode of living.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KELLER. This is not going to cost the Government of the United States anything.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is not the cost I am objecting to.

Mr. KELLER. If the people of this country believe that a man is great enough as an orator and thinker to deserve a monument to his memory and are willing to pay for it, why should they not have the privilege?

Mr. WOLCOTT. We are not particularly interested in a man's oratorical ability. It is what he says. I am interested in what the man says, not the way he said it. I would have no objection to the gentleman's erecting a monument to Robert Ingersoll in his district, but I do not believe the National Capital is the place to erect a monument to an atheist or any other nonbeliever.

Mr. Speaker, I insist on my objection.

Mr. WOLFENDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

INTERSTATE LEGISLATIVE REFERENCE BUREAU

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 19, to make available to Congress the services and data of the Interstate Legislative Reference Bureau.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a remarkable bill, in that it not only appropriates for this year but it seeks to go back to the fiscal year 1932 and appropriate $40,000 for that year, and then $40,000 per year for 1933 and for 1934 and $40,000 per year for each year hereafter, for the legislative reference bureau. I think that it should not be passed, and that this $40,000 per year should be saved for the people. How are we to reduce taxes if we keep on spending extravagantly? This $40,000 per year, after all, is not such a small sum and is worth saving. Therefore I object.

NATIONAL ARCHIVES OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8910, to establish a National Archives of the United States Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not think we should create this office and pay the officer $10,000 a year, when SOL BLOOM and United States Senators serve for $9,000. If it is necessary to create this position we ought not to pay more than the reasonable salary of a United States Senator.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Does the gentleman mean Mr. BLOOM got $9,000 over and above his salary for running the centennial?

Mr. BLANTON. No; he got nothing extra for running the centennial.

The gentleman got more for the school children of the country for the money he spent than any other man has ever furnished the public for a like amount of money. I am for SOL BLOOM, and I do not believe in paying somebody else more money than Sol gets; therefore I object.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. My only objection is to the salary. If the gentleman will reduce the salary to $7,500, I will not object. I can furnish the gentleman men from my State who are well qualified, who will make good officers in this position, and who would gladly serve for $7,500.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, may I explain this bill? If I may have a minute, I should like to explain to the Members of the House how important the bill is.

Here we have a building that is nearing completion that cost the Government $10,000,000, and there is no one there to superintend it or to take care of the planning of the shelves, indexing, or anything else, and unless you pass this legislation now this building is going to remain idle for many months.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman mean to tell me that with all of the 70,000 Federal employees in the city of Washington there is no one who can oversee this new building and that a $10,000 man is necessary for this purpose?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes; I mean to tell the gentleman that we are putting the salary of the archivist at the same amount as the salary of the Librarian of Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman himself were in charge of this bill, would he not make a good archivist?

Mr. BLOOM. The gentleman flatters me.

Mr. BLANTON. Why should we employ a man with no greater qualifications than the gentleman and pay him a larger salary?

Mr. BLOOM. Would the gentleman be willing to pass the bill if we amended it and provided a salary of $9,000 a year?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my objection if the gentleman will properly reduce the salary.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, who is the keeper of the archives now?

Mr. BLOOM. There is no keeper of the archives provided in the Government service. We have been trying to get an archives building and an archivist for over 20 years, and if the gentleman will investigate the matter he will be surprised to learn the number of documents that have been lost or stolen from the Government on account of not having an archivist. We are the only country in the world that has no archives building and no archivist.

Mr. TRUAX. What are the special qualifications necessary to keep documents and books from being stolen?

Mr. BLANTON. They need a man like Elmer Lewis, who is the superintendent of the document room. He would make eventually the greatest archivist in the world.

Mr. BLOOM. I may say, Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on the Library and has been approved by the Librarian and other departments of the Government and unless we can pass this measure today we will be without any custodian of this building that has cost the Government $10,000,000 and is now about to be completed. Therefore, I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman mean to state as a fact that if we do not enact this bill today this building will be without a custodian?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes; there is absolutely no legislation covering this proposition in connection with this building.

Mr. TRUAX. Well, I shall object and see if they cannot take care of it in some other way.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I objected, but I should like to be given a half minute to make a statement to the gentleman. Cannot such a man be employed through funds of the P.W.A.?

Mr. BLOOM. No.

Mr. TRUAX. Why not?

Mr. BLOOM. Simply because he cannot be so employed.

Mr. BLANTON. They would be United States funds just the same.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JUNEAU, ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2811, to authorize the incorporated city of Juneau, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $100,000 for municipal public works, including regrading and paving of streets and sidewalks, installation of sewer and water pipe, construction of bridges, construction of concrete bulkheads, and construction of refuse incinerator.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated city of Juneau, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to issue its general obligation bonds in any sum not exceeding $100,000, to be used for the following purposes, namely: The sum of $51,400 for regrading and paving of streets and sidewalks, the sum of $2,750 for installation of sewer and water pipe, the sum of $5,000 for bridge construction and replacement, the sum of $12,850 for the construction of concrete bulkheads, the sum of $25,000 for construction of refuse incinerator, and the sum of $3,000 for engineering supervision and overhead on all of the above-mentioned works, the cost of the necessary materials, as well as of installation and construction, to be paid out of the sums above specified. All of said improvements are to be made in the said city of Juneau, Alaska, except said refuse incinerator, which may be placed without the corporate limits of said city.

SEC. 2. That before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the said city of Juneau, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said city of Juneau whose names appear on the last assessment roll of said city for municipal taxation. Not less than 20 days' notice of such election shall be given by publication thereof in a newspaper printed and published and of general circulation of said city before the day fixed for such election. That the registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality, and said bonds shall be issued only upon condition that not less than a majority of the votes cast at such election in said city shall be in favor of the issuance of said bonds.

SEC. 3. The said bonds, when issued, shall bear the written signature of the mayor and clerk of the city of Juneau, and shall have impressed thereon the official seal of said city at the time of their issuance. The bonds may be sold at either public or private sale, as the common council of Juneau shall direct. The bonds above mentioned, when authorized to be issued as herein provided, shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the common council of said city of Juneau, Alaska, before the issuance of such bonds, and said interest shall not exceed the rate of 6 percent per annum, payable semiannually, and the bonds shall be sold at not less than par, plus accrued interest. Said bonds shall be in denominations of $1,000 each, or, if purchased by the United States through the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works or any other department or agency of the United States Government, in such other denominations as shall be satisfactory to the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works, or to such other agency of the United States as may have charge of the matter. The principal of said bonds shall be due within 25 years from the date thereof: Provided, That the common council of the said city of Juneau shall have the right to call and pay such bonds, or any portion thereof, at any time, at par, plus accrued interest; but if said city of Juneau shall exercise the option to pay such bonds before the date of their maturity, it shall pay first the bonds held by the Government of the United States or by any department or agency thereof, if any, the last maturities of said bonds to be paid first.

SEC. 4. The principal and interest of said bonds shall be payable in such funds as are, on the respective dates of payments of the principal of and interest on the bonds, legal tender for debts to the United States of America, at the office of the city treasurer of the city of Juneau, Alaska, or at such bank or banks, or at such place or places as may be designated by the Common Council of the City of Juneau, such place or places of payment to be designated in each of the several bonds issued.

SEC. 5. No part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purpose or purposes other than those specified in this act. Nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the issuance and sale of said bonds for any one or more of the purposes and in the respective amounts hereinbefore specified. Said bonds shall be sold only when and in such amounts as the Common Council of the City of Juneau shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be disbursed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and under the orders and directions of the said common council from time to time as the same may be required for the purposes hereinabove set forth.

SEC. 6. The city of Juneau is hereby authorized to accept hereunder such loan and grant as may be awarded to it by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works acting under and pursuant to title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act and any amendments, additions, and supplements thereto.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the incorporated city of Juneau, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to undertake the municipal public works herein specified and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $103,000. Said city is hereby authorized and empowered to regrade and pave streets and sidewalks and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $51,400; to install sewer and water pipes and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $2,750; to construct and replace a bridge and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $5,000; to construct concrete bulkheads and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $12,850; to construct a refuse incinerator and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $25,000; to employ such engineering supervision and pay such overhead expenses as may be necessary in connection with the above-mentioned public works and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $6,000. All of said public works are to be undertaken in the said city of Juneau, Alaska, except said refuse incinerator, which may be placed without the corporate limits of said city.

"SEC. 2. Before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the said city of Juneau, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued in the amounts above specified for any or all of the purposes hereinbefore set forth shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said city of Juneau whose names appear on the last assessment roll of said city for municipal taxation. The form of the ballot shall be such that the electors may vote for or against the issuance of bonds for each of the purposes herein specified in the amounts herein authorized. Not less than 20 days' notice of such election shall be given by publication thereof in a newspaper printed and published and of general circulation in said city before the day fixed for such election. The registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality, and said bonds shall be issued for any or all of the purposes herein authorized only upon condition that not less than a majority of the votes cast at such election in said city shall be in favor of the issuance of said bonds for such purpose.

"SEC. 3. Such bonds shall be coupon in form, may bear such date or dates, may be in such denomination or denominations, may mature in such amounts and at such time or times, not exceeding 30 years from the date thereof, may be payable in such medium of payment and at such place or places, may be sold at either public or private sale, may be redeemable, with or without premium, or nonredeemable, may carry such registration privileges as to either principal and interest, principal only, or both, as shall be prescribed by the common council of said city of Juneau at the time such bonds are authorized to be issued. The bonds shall bear the signatures of the mayor and clerk of the city of Juneau, and shall have impressed thereon the official seal of said city. In case of the officers whose signatures or countersignatures appear on the bonds shall cease to be such officers before delivery of such bonds, such signatures or countersignatures shall nevertheless be valid and sufficient for all purposes the same as if they had remained in office until such delivery. Said bonds shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the common council of the said city of Juneau, not to exceed 6 percent per annum, payable semiannually, and the bonds shall be sold at not less than the principal amount thereof plus accrued interest.

"SEC. 4. The bonds herein authorized to be issued shall be general obligations of said city of Juneau, payable as to both interest and principal from ad valorem taxes which shall be levied upon all the taxable property within the corporate limits of said city of Juneau in an amount sufficient to pay the interest on and principal of such bonds as and when the same become due and payable.

"SEC. 5. No part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purpose or purposes other than those specified in this act. Said bonds shall be sold only when and in such amounts as the Common Council of the City of Juneau shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be disbursed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and under the orders and directions of said common council from time to time as the same may be required for said purposes.

"SEC. 6. The city of Juneau is hereby authorized to enter into contracts with the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof, under the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act and act amendatory thereof and acts supplemental thereto, and revisions thereof, and the regulations made in pursuance thereof, and under any further acts of the Congress of the United States to encourage public works, for the sale of bonds issued in accordance with provisions of this act or for the acceptance of a grant of money to aid said town in financing any public works herein authorized; or to enter into contracts with any person or corporation, public or private, for the sale of such bonds; and such contracts may contain such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by and between the common council of said city of Juneau and the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof or any such purchaser."

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIMOND: Page 7, line 15, after the word "case", insert the word "any."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "An act to authorize the incorporated city of Juneau, Alaska, to undertake certain municipal public works, including regrading and paving of streets and sidewalks, installation of sewer and water pipes, bridge construction and replacement, construction of concrete bulkheads, and construction of refuse incinerator, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $103,000."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

SKAGWAY, ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2812, to authorize the incorporated city of Skagway, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $40,000, to be used for the construction, reconstruction, replacing, and installation of a water-distribution system.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated city of Skagway, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to issue its general obligation bonds in any sum not exceeding $40,000, to be used for the purpose of constructing, reconstructing, replacing, and installing a water-distribution system to replace the present system now owned by the city of Skagway.

SEC. 2. That before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the said city of Skagway, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said city of Skagway whose names appear on the last assessment roll of said city for municipal taxation. Not less than 20 days' notice of such election shall be given by posting notices of the same in three conspicuous places within the corporate limits of the city of Skagway, Alaska, one of which shall be at the front door of the United States post office. That the registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality, and said bonds shall be issued only upon condition that not less than a majority of the votes cast at such election in said city shall be in favor of the issuance of said bonds.

SEC. 3. The said bonds, when issued, shall bear the written signature of the mayor and clerk of the city of Skagway, and shall have impressed thereon the official seal of said city at the time of their issuance. The bonds may be sold at either public or private sale, as the common council of Skagway shall direct. The bonds above mentioned, when authorized to be issued as herein provided, shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the common council of the said city of Skagway, Alaska, before the issuance of such bonds, and said interest shall not exceed the rate of 6 percent per annum, payable semiannually, and the bonds shall be sold at not less than par, plus accrued interest. Said bonds shall be in denominations of $1,000 each, or, if purchased by the United States through the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works or any other department or agency of the United States Government, in such other denominations as shall be satisfactory to the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works, or to such other agency of the United States as may have charge of the matter. The principal of said bonds shall be due within 25 years from the date thereof: Provided, That the common council of said city of Skagway shall have the right to call and pay such bonds, or any portion thereof, at any time, at par, plus accrued interest; but if said city of Skagway shall exercise the option to pay said bonds before the date of their maturity, it shall pay first the bonds held by the Government of the United States or by any department or agency thereof, if any, the last maturities of said bonds to be paid first.

SEC. 4. The principal and interest of said bonds shall be payable in such funds as are, on the respective dates of payments of the principal and interest on the bonds, legal tender for debts to the United States of America, at the office of the city treasurer of the city of Skagway, Alaska, or at such bank or banks, or at such place or places as may be designated by the Common Council of the City of Skagway, such place or places of payment to be designated in each of the several bonds issued.

SEC. 5.-No part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purposes other than those specified in this act, and said bonds shall be sold only when and in such amounts as the Common Council of the City of Skagway shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be disbursed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and under the orders and directions of the said common council from time to time, as the same may be required for the purposes hereinabove set forth.

SEC. 6. The city of Skagway is hereby authorized to accept hereunder such loan and grant as may be awarded to it by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works acting under and pursuant to title II of the National Industry Recovery Act and any amendments, additions, and supplements thereto.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "An act to authorize the incorporated city of Skagway, Alaska, to construct, reconstruct, replace, and install a water-distribution system and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $40,000."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

TO AUTHORIZE WRANGELL, ALASKA, TO ISSUE BONDS FOR PUBLIC WORKS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2813, an act to authorize the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $47,000 for municipal public works, including enlargement, extension, construction, and reconstruction of water-supply system; extension, construction, and reconstruction of retaining wall and filling, and paving streets and sidewalks; and extension, construction, and reconstruction of sewers in said town of Wrangell.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to issue its general-obligation bonds in any sum not exceeding $47,000, to be used for the following purposes, namely: The sum of $29,000 for enlargement, construction, and reconstruction of water-supply system; the sum of $12,000 for extension, construction, and reconstruction of concrete retaining wall and filling, and paving streets and sidewalks; and the sum of $6,000 for extension, construction, and reconstruction of sewers; all in the said town of Wrangell, Alaska.

SEC. 2. That before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the said town of Wrangell, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said town of Wrangell whose names appear on the last assessment roll of said town for municipal taxation. Not less than 20 days' notice of such election shall be given by posting notices of the same in three conspicuous places within the corporate limits of the town of Wrangell, Alaska, one of which shall be at the front door of the United States post office. That the registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality, and said bonds shall be issued only upon condition that not less than a majority of the votes cast at such election in said town shall be in favor of the issuance of said bonds.

SEC. 3. The bonds, when issued, shall bear the written signature of the mayor and clerk of the town of Wrangell, and shall have impressed thereon the official seal of said town at the time of their issuance. The bonds may be sold at either public or private sale, as the common council of Wrangell shall direct. The bonds above mentioned, when authorized to be issued as herein provided, shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the common council of the said town of Wrangell, Alaska, before the issuance of said bonds, and said interest shall not exceed the rate of 6 percent per annum, payable semiannually, and the bonds shall be sold at not less than par, plus accrued interest. Said bonds shall be in denominations of $1,000 each, or, if purchased by the United States through the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works, or any other department or agency of the United States Government, in such other denominations as shall be satisfactory to the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works, or to such other agency of the United States as may have charge of the matter. The principal of said bonds shall be due within twenty-five years from the date thereof: Provided, That the common council of the said town of Wrangell shall have the right to call and pay such bonds, or any portion thereof, at any time, at par, plus accrued interest; but if said town of Wrangell shall exercise the option to pay said bonds before the date of their maturity, it shall pay first the bonds held by the Government of the United States or by any department or agency thereof, if any, the last maturities of said bonds to be paid first.

SEC. 4. The principal and interest of said bonds shall be payable in such funds as are, on the respective dates of payments of the principal of and interest on the bonds, legal tender for debts of the United States of America, at the office of the town treasurer of the town of Wrangell, Alaska, or at such bank or banks, or at such place or places, as may be designated by the common council of the town of Wrangell, such place or places of payment to be designated in each of the several bonds issued.

SEC. 5. No part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purpose or purposes other than those specified in this act. Nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the issuance and sale of said bonds for any one or more of the purposes and in the respective amounts hereinbefore specified. Said bonds shall be sold only when and in such amounts as the common council of the town of Wrangell shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be disbursed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and under the orders and directions of the said common council from time to time as the same may be required for the purposes hereinabove set forth.

SEC. 6. The town of Wrangell is hereby authorized to accept hereunder such loan and grant as may be awarded to it by the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works acting under and pursuant to title 2 of the National Industrial Recovery Act and any amendments, additions, and supplements thereto.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to undertake the municipal public works herein specified and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $51,000. Said town is hereby authorized and empowered to construct, reconstruct, enlarge, extend, or improve its water-supply system and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $32,000; to construct a retaining wall and to backfill behind same to make a permanent street, and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $13,000; to construct, reconstruct, enlarge, extend, or improve sewers, and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $6,000.

"SEC. 2. That before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the said town of Wrangell, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued in the amounts above specified for any of the purposes hereinbefore set forth shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said town of Wrangell whose names appear on the last assessment roll of said town for municipal taxation. The form of the ballot shall be such that the electors may vote for or against the issuance of bonds for each of the purposes herein specified in the amounts herein authorized. Not less than 20 days' notice of such election shall be given by posting notices of the same in three conspicuous places within the corporate limits of the town of Wrangell, Alaska, one of which shall be at the front door of the United States post office. The registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality, and said bonds shall be issued for any or all of the purposes herein authorized only upon condition that not less than a majority of the votes cast at such election in said town shall be in favor of the issuance of said bonds for such purpose.

"SEC. 3. Such bonds shall be coupon in form, may bear such date or dates, may be in such denomination or denominations, may mature in such amounts and at such time or times, not exceeding thirty years from the date thereof, may be payable in such medium of payment and at such place or places, may be sold at either public or private sale, may be redeemable, with or without premium, or nonredeemable, may carry such registration privileges as to either principal and interest, principal only, or both, as shall be prescribed by the common council of said town of Wrangell at the time such bonds are authorized to be issued. The bonds shall bear the signatures of the mayor and clerk of the town of Wrangell, and shall have impressed thereon the official seal of said town. In case any of the officers whose signatures or countersignatures appear on the bonds shall cease to be such officers before delivery of such bonds, such signatures or countersignatures shall nevertheless be valid and sufficient for all purposes the same as if they had remained in office until such delivery. Said bonds shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the common council of the said town of Wrangell, not to exceed 6 percent per annum, payable semiannually, and the bonds shall be sold at not less than the principal amount thereof plus accrued interest.

"SEC. 4. The bonds, herein authorized to be issued shall be general obligations of said town of Wrangell, payable as to both interest and principal from ad valorem taxes which shall be levied upon all the taxable property within the corporate limits of said town of Wrangell in an amount sufficient to pay the interest on and principal of such bonds as and when the same become due and payable. Such of the bonds as may be issued to construct, reconstruct, enlarge, extend, or improve the water-supply system of said town of Wrangell may, if so provided by the common council of said town of Wrangell, be additionally secured by a direct pledge of all or any part of the revenue of said water-supply system and any subsequent additions or extensions thereto, remaining after provision for the payment of the reasonable costs of operation and maintenance of said system and the cost of such repairs, improvements and betterments thereto as shall be necessary to keep the same at all times in good repair and working order.

"SEC. 5. No part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purpose or purposes other than those specified in this act. Said bonds shall be sold only when and in such amounts as the Common Council of the Town of Wrangell shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be disbursed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and under the orders and directions of said common council from time to time as the same may be required for said purposes.

"SEC. 6. The town of Wrangell is hereby authorized to enter into contracts with the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof, under the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act and acts amendatory thereof and acts supplemental thereto, and revisions thereof, and the regulations made in pursuance thereof, and under any further acts of the Congress of the United States to encourage public works, for the sale of bonds issued in accordance with provisions of this act or for the acceptance of a grant of money to aid said town in financing any public works herein authorized; or to enter into contracts with any person or corporation, public or private, for the sale of such bonds; and such contracts may contain such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by and between the common council of said town of Wrangell and the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof or any such purchaser."

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to correct a typographical error in the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIMOND: Page 9, line 2, after the word "to" where it appears the second time, strike out the word "issued" and insert "issue."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "An act to authorize the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, to undertake certain municipal public works, including construction, reconstruction, enlargement, extension, and improvements of its water-supply system; construction of a retaining wall and to backfill behind same to make a permanent street; and construction, reconstruction, enlargement, extension, and improvements to sewers, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $51,000."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

CURRENCY, BONDS, AND M'LEOD BILL

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, on April 14, my colleague, Mr. PATMAN, of Texas, delivered a very able radio address on the subject of currency and bonds, and the McLeod bill. I ask unanimous consent to insert that radio address in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following very able radio address by my colleague, Mr. PATMAN, of Texas, on the subject of Currency, Bonds, and the McLeod Bill:

I desire to express appreciation to the National Broadcasting Co. for the opportunity of using its facilities to make these remarks.

WHAT IS MONEY?

One great economist defined money to be "that which passes freely from hand to hand throughout the community in payment for goods and in full discharge of debts, being accepted without reference to the character or credit of the person offering it, and without the intention of the person who receives it to consume it otherwise than in tendering it to others."

Suppose we did not have money. If you had wheat to spare and needed shoes, possibly you could trade the wheat for the shoes, but not likely; you would probably have to trade the wheat for hides and then trade the hides for shoes. This would be very inconvenient. It is much better that we have something called money that has a definite value measured in all commodities in order that anything may be exchanged for money and money may be exchanged for anything. Money is a standard or common denominator of value. Money itself is of no value; it is a simple tool desired for the one purpose of making exchanges. Money is no mysterious thing, no mystic principles veil or obscure it; it is a tool for making exchanges, just as a hammer is a tool for driving nails.

SCRIP USED IN A THOUSAND CITIES

Different commodities have been used as money; knives were formerly used as money in China; tobacco served the same function in Virginia; some other commodities that have served this function are wheat, bark, cattle, iron, and shells. The Department of Commerce recently made a survey and discovered because of a necessity of money over a thousand cities and groups are using scrip and barter for money; it was acceptable to the people at these places in the absence of a sufficient medium of exchange.

STABLE MONEY

It is desirable that we have a stable dollar. Our farmers borrowed money and voted upon themselves road, school, and other improvement bonds when wheat was worth $1.50 a bushel and cotton was worth 20 cents a pound. Later they were called upon to pay these debts when wheat was 40 cents a bushel and cotton 5 cents a pound. This resulted in the payment of $4, in what the farmer had to pay with, to every $1 borrowed; instead of being called upon to pay 6 or 10 percent interest, they were called upon to pay the equivalent of 24 or 40 percent interest.

SUPPLY AND DEMAND OF MONEY

Do not be misled into believing that supply and demand of a commodity is the sole controlling factor in determining the price of the commodity. Just as much depends on the supply and demand of money and credit. If our cotton and wheat farmers produce only one fourth of a normal crop this year and money and credit are made scarce, high, and dear, cotton and wheat will be cheap.

Since the supply and demand of money which includes credit controls the price of all labor, services, and commodities, our Government should be careful about who controls this great privilege. The people are entitled to have someone in charge of that great lever that expands or contracts money and credit at will who has their general welfare at heart; no one should have charge of this lever who can manipulate it in a way to make profit for themselves to the detriment of the general welfare. What chance has a producer or wage earner of this Nation to earn a decent livelihood for himself and family if the value of his products or labor is fixed by someone who has in mind making a profit for himself?

CONSTITUTIONAL MANDATE

The framers of the United States Constitution in article 1, section 8, very wisely said: "Congress shall have the power to coin money and regulate the value thereof."

This provision of the Constitution is mandatory. All Members of Congress are sworn to uphold the Constitution. Why has this provision never been carried out? The answer is simple. In the early days of our national existence the people were deceived into believing that the subject of money was so mysterious and intricate that only a few of the financiers understood the subject, and therefore the great privilege of issuing and distributing money should be farmed out to them. This was done and it has never been changed, except to give them more power and authority. The strange part of it all is, as often pointed out by Congressman BUSBY, of Mississippi, that the ones who are the beneficiaries of this great privilege are not even charged with the duty of furnishing the people a sufficient circulating medium.

FIAT-MONEY PARROTS

Do not blame the bankers for this. They are not to blame; they are doing what Congress has permitted them to do; Congress should be held responsible. However, when Congress seriously considers printing sufficient money to carry out this constitutional mandate the holders of this great privilege and their satellites repeat like parrots such phrases as "printing-press money", "rag money", "fiat money", "baloney money", and "greenbacks." They do not tell you that it is the same kind of money that is printed for them and that it will be backed by the same security which is the credit of this Nation. Let me make a prediction. The people are getting wise to such false, selfish, and greedy propaganda, and will, before very long, compel their Congress to change our idiotic monetary system by complying with the Constitution. I'll admit, it takes a long time to sell the people of this Nation a good proposal.

CIVIL WAR GREENBACKS

From 1861 to 1865 there was a war between the States. The United States Government or the Union issued $400,000,000 of money to assist in carrying on the war. This money was not secured by gold or any other metal; it was secured by the credit of the Nation. When General Early, of Southern Confederacy fame, was about to take Washington, and the Union was losing ground, this money went down to 35 cents on the dollar. When peace was restored and the credit of the Nation was no longer questioned, this money went back to 100 cents on the dollar and has remained there ever since. It was the restoration of the Nation's credit, and not gold, that caused these greenbacks to become worth 100 cents on the dollar. Three hundred and forty-six million dollars of this paper money has remained outstanding and is outstanding today; no one ever refused to take it; as it is worn out it is replaced with new bills. These greenbacks up to June 30, 1933, have saved the people of this country more than $11,000,000,0000 at 5 percent compound interest.

GERMANY'S INFLATION

The inflation in Germany is cited as evidence of what will likely happen here if the power to issue money is taken away from private corporations and restored to Congress. The German situation is not in point at all. In Germany the people owed more debts than they could pay. They could not cancel the debts, but they could print more money to pay them with. In fact, that country deliberately printed money until it was worthless, so their people could use the money to pay their debts with and get out of debt. They accomplished their desires.

OUR AIM

We do not desire to and will not destroy our monetary system, but we do want the people to be allowed the privilege of paying their debts in dollars that are worth approximately what they were worth when borrowed.

MODERN, UP-TO-DATE PRINTING PLANT

Here in Washington City the Government owns and operates a modern, up-to-date printing plant for the purpose of printing paper money and Government securities. It is the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, it employs 5,500 people, and at one time got behind with its money printing until it had to be operated 24 hours a day. The question is, Who gets this paper money; how do they get it; and who benefits by its issuance?

THE GREAT MONOPOLY

There are 12 Federal Reserve banks in the Nation; they are not the same banks or same system created in 1913. The law has been completely change, so-called "perfecting" amendments have diverted these banks from the course intended by Congress in 1913. They are owned by the member banks—private corporations—which are in turn owned by individuals. The Government does not own one penny of stock in these institutions, neither does it at this time get one penny of profit from their operations, although they use the credit of the Nation free, are exempt from all taxes, except upon their real estate, and are given the greatest privilege that any institution on earth has ever had—a franchise that is worth billions of dollars.

POWER TO ISSUE BLANKET MORTGAGES

These banks have the right to issue paper money that our Government prints for them at their request; they do pay about 27 cents for printing every thousand dollars worth of bills. I will read from one side of one of these bills:

"Federal Reserve note. The United States of America will pay to bearer on demand $5."

On the other side is the picture of the United States Treasury and the words, "United States of America, $5."

You will notice that the Government of the United States agrees to redeem this note that is issued by an institution that is owned solely by private corporations. The Government's agreement carries with it a blanket mortgage on all the homes, other property, and the incomes of all the people of this Nation.

ZERO RATE OF INTEREST

Do such banks pay for the privilege of issuing these blanket mortgages on the property and incomes of the people? The answer is no. The Federal Reserve Act, section 16, provides that they shall pay an interest charge that may be fixed by the Federal Reserve Board. The Board fixed the rate at zero. Therefore these 12 banks have used the people's credit up to the amount of $60,000,000,000 dollars a year turnover for 20 years for the zero rate of interest. If they had paid a reasonable rate of interest, the Government would have collected hundreds of millions of dollars.

Practically all the money we have in circulation today is money issued by these banks. They use the Nation's credit free to issue it, but someone is paying interest on it every day it is outstanding. The only way the people can expand their currency under this system is to go into debt deeper and pay more interest. The people owe $203,000,000,000 in debts now. During the year 1932 the national income was $40,000,000,000; that year, when we had less than $5,000,000,000 in circulation, the people paid $10,000,000,000 in interest charges alone.

PEOPLE SHOULD GET MONEY MINDED

I hope the people get money minded, money conscious. Look at the paper money in your pocket and do not stop investigating until you know all about why, how, and for whose benefit it was issued. It is the one big problem; when it is solved most of all our other problems will sink into insignificance. Congress is the branch of Government charged by the Constitution with solving it or with submitting to the Executive proposals to that end.

MONEY ISSUED ON DEBT

Nine hundred and eighty-eight million dollars of the present circulating money was obtained by banking institutions depositing Government bonds as collateral security for its issuance. Under the present set-up, if the Government needs a million dollars it issues bonds for the amount and sells the bonds. If certain banking institutions buy the million dollars in bonds it can redeposit the bonds with the Government and receive a million dollars in new money printed at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. At the same time it uses the money it will get interest on the bonds deposited, but will be required to keep 5 percent of it on deposit with the Treasury and pay one half of the 1-percent tax, which is to cover the cost of printing and replacing the money. In this way many banks are subsidized by the Government. No one can give a good reason why the Government should not issue the money in the first place rather than issue a tax-exempt interest-bearing bond and then permit its holder to use the bond or debt as security for the issuance of the money. The Wall Street parrots have never been taught to call this money "printing press" or "fiat" or "baloney" money.

TAKE THE GOVERNMENT OUT OF PRIVATE BUSINESS AND TAKE PRIVATE CORPORATIONS OUT OF THE GOVERNMENT'S BUSINESS

Our Government, under the leadership of a great President, is making a determined effort to restore prosperity to the people. Much has been done toward helping wage earners, laborers, farmers, home owners, business, industry, and commerce. Debts have been scaled down, extended, and interest charges have been reduced. It is almost inconceivable that we can continue this start on the road to recovery without the Government's having control over its own media of exchange. The issuance and distribution of money is a governmental function. It never should have been farmed out to private corporations; since it has been, the Congress should immediately reassume this great privilege and exercise it in the interest of the people. Our slogan should be: "Get the Government out of private business and get private corporations out of the Government's business." The first step should be for the Government to take over the 12 Federal Reserve banks and coordinate their activities with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; then the Government's credit can be used for all banks—National, State, or private—all business, all agriculture, all commerce, and all people. Interest rates can be substantially reduced and the Government can obtain considerable revenue by charging a small sum for the use of its credit; all governmental financing can be handled through the new set-up without charging the Government interest which will eliminate the necessity for the issuance by the Government of another tax-exempt interest bearing bond, or to increase taxes.

NEED FOR ADDITIONAL MONEY

Is there a need for additional money? During the last year there has been a shrinkage of actual currency in circulation of $1,600,000,000. There has been a contraction of commercial checking deposits of $20,000,000,000 since the depression began. Ex-Senator Robert L. Owen, framer of the Federal Reserve Act and one of the best-informed men in the world on our monetary problems, has pointed out that the effect of this contraction has been to destroy the value of property in terms of money and to give money a very extraordinary value in terms of property. The banks apparently are unable or unwilling to expand these deposits by loans and thus restore the volume of credit which we previously had, in whole or even in substantial part. The Government alone can expand the currency money to replace the check money contracted. In 1929 money was turning over or was being used in exchange at an average rate of 22 times a year; it is now turning over 11 times a year. The contraction of money and credit, together with the slow turnover, has reduced the business of the country more than $800,000,000,000 the last year. That situation can be cured by Congress doing what the Constitution says it should do, "coin money and regulate the value thereof."

CURRENCY INSTEAD OF BONDS

A few years ago Mr. Thomas A. Edison was inspecting Muscle Shoals. He remarked that the Government should operate that great project in the interest of the people. He was asked if he favored the Government's borrowing the $30,000,000 necessary to make repairs. His answer substantially was: "No; why should the Government borrow its own credit? If it issues tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds and sells the bonds to Wall Street bankers to get the money, by the time the bonds are paid the bankers will have collected as much in interest as the Government received on the bonds. In other words, the bankers who will not furnish an ounce of material or a lick of labor will get as much out of it as the men who do the work and furnish the material." Mr. Edison also said at the same time: "Any government that can issue a dollar bond, interest bearing, that is good can issue a dollar bill, noninterest bearing, that is good, the only difference is the bill is easier to redeem because it does not draw interest." No one can answer Mr. Edison's argument.

HOW MUCH MONEY CAN THE GOVERNMENT ISSUE?

The Government has outstanding today about $26,000,000,000 in bonds and securities. Others are to be issued soon. The interest this year to be paid by the Government will amount to almost one thousand million dollars. A program should be considered now that will call for the gradual retirement of all Government bonds upon maturity or when callable with new currency and issue no more of such obligations. It will be a simple process. We will merely substitute one form of Government obligation for another form of Government obligation. The stock argument against this is that every dollar issued will go into the banks and upon each dollar as a base the banks may issue 10 credit dollars, which will cause undue expansion of the currency. That is true; but the argument may be destroyed completely by changing the law allowing the banks to use 1 dollar to issue 10; as the actual money is increased, require the banks to use a larger reserve or prevent them from lending money they do not have if the facts and circumstances should warrant. Many people who are against issuing a few billion dollars in money are highly in favor of the banks' issuing the same amount in credit, claiming it will serve the same purpose. It will serve the same purpose, but an enormous amount of interest would have to be paid on the credit that would not have to be paid on the money, and besides the banks could call in the credit, deflate values, and destroy prices as they did in 1920. They could not control the actual money in that manner; therefore, they are against it.

HOW WILL THE MONEY BE REDEEMED?

The Treasury and the Federal Reserve banks have sufficient gold to be used as a reserve for the retirement of this money if a gold base is desired. Silver may also be used. We have and can obtain plenty of it for that purpose, and at the same time help our export trade. Neither gold nor silver is absolutely necessary, as the money issued will be good for the payment of all debts, taxes, and import duties, although from an international-trade standpoint it may be desirable to use silver. It will be redeemable in services rendered by the post offices; in payment of all kinds of taxes, including income and excise; in payment of all debts, including debts due the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. We will be using cash instead of interest-bearing credit as a media of exchange. Money will go into channels of trade and production, instead of into tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds.

WILL WAGE EARNER BE INJURED?

It is contended that if more money is issued the dollar will become cheaper, which will be harmful to the farmers and those who live on fixed incomes. We can get on a currency basis, instead of a credit basis, without changing the purchasing power of the dollar, but most of us who advocate issuing more money really desire the return of what may be termed a cheaper dollar. As the dollar becomes cheaper real estate, common stocks, cotton, wheat, raw materials, labor, and all goods and services upon which there is no fixed price increase in value. This will enable the ones in these groups to have additional purchasing power.

Let us see how much it will affect the wage earner who receives one of these so-called "cheaper" dollars. He can use it to pay 100 cents on his debts, taxes, insurance, rent, electricity, gas, water, telephone, railroad freight, and passenger rates, and all other bills, goods, and services upon which there is a fixed and inflexible price. Any adjustment will be in favor of additional purchasing power, which will be in the direction of additional consumption of goods. The factory employee will probably pay a little more for eggs which will enable the farmer to buy more of what his factory produces. It will be better for the wage earner to receive a dollar that will not purchase so much in certain commodities than not to have a job which will enable him to earn a dollar. I much prefer to bring purchasing power up to the point where our surplus may be consumed rather than force production down to a very limited buying power.

In conclusion I hope you will consider the following statements:

1. The Federal Reserve Banks should be taken over by the Government and operated in the interest of all the people, banks, industry, agriculture, and commerce.

2. No private corporation, or corporation owned by private corporations should have the right to issue money.

3. The Government should issue currency when in need of money instead of tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds.

4. No additional taxes should be levied as long as we need additional money.

5. Very few of the bankers of the country, even the real good ones, have ever studied or thought anything about this monetary problem.

6. A billion dollars a year can be used by the Government to a better advantage than paying it as interest on Government bonds that may be used as a basis for the issuance of currency.

7. Direct credits should receive the thoughtful consideration of the people.

8. Opposition to any progressive proposal may be expected from those who will be deprived of special privileges, the die-hard, orthodox, hard-money advocates, and the poll-parrot satellites of

Wall Street who repeat only what others say and never think for themselves.

9. We need and must have more money as a circulating medium, but we should not issue more Government bonds in order to get it.

M'LEOD DEPOSIT-GUARANTY BILL

Although I am strongly in favor of currency expansion, I cannot agree with many of my colleagues that the McLeod bill providing that the Government should pay all losses to depositors in closed banks should pass. This proposal, to my mind, is not supported by logic and reason, and sets a precedent that would obligate the Government to pay everybody all their losses by reason of the panic, especially those involving State banks, private banks, building-and-loan companies, joint-stock land banks, and, finally, losses on the stock exchanges. Depositors who had their money stolen by bank officials who are now serving time in the penitentiaries for their crimes will have their losses made good by the Government, and even the criminals themselves will be reimbursed to the extent of their own deposits. The bill provides for more tax-exempt, interest-bearing bonds to be issued by the Government and sold in order to make the payments. Where it can be shown that the agents of the Government are responsible for the losses in a bank failure, consideration should be given such claims; but to pay them all on the theory that the monetary policy caused their loss sets a precedent for the payment of practically all debts for all persons, firms, and corporations. A recent report discloses that the deposits in national banks are owned as follows:

Sixty percent owned by 0.8 of 1 percent of the depositors.

Forty-five percent owned by 0.1 of 1 percent of the depositors.

Therefore, if the depositors are paid, the money will not be well and equally distributed. Many better plans for distribution have been proposed.

PROGRESS OF ANTILYNCHING LEGISLATION

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, it is to me, a citizen of Indiana, a source of much gratification that under the leadership of an able Indiana Senator a far-reaching step has been taken to sponge out of our national life the foulest blot that ever stamped with disgrace the honor of the American Nation. I refer to the barbarous, the unspeakable crime of lynching.

In the hurry and press of the public business, with measures of epochal importance crowding upon us, we perhaps have not devoted the attention which the subject merits to the very important steps that have recently been taken at the Senate end of the Capitol looking toward the enactment of a real antilynching bill which, if it becomes a law, will make lynching too risky a crime for even the most reckless to engage in.

I wish every person in the country might read the testimony on lynchings in the United States that was in progress for weeks before the Judiciary Subcommittee of the Senate, of which Senator FREDERICK VAN NUYS, of Indiana, is chairman, and which testimony is now available, on application to the committee room, in two printed volumes. The Indiana Senator has rendered a service that is invaluable to the Nation in bringing forth for the first time a complete compendium of evidence which lays bare in all their naked hideousness the revolting crimes committed in the name of lynch law. The fine judicial mind of the Indiana Senator has enabled him to correlate the essential facts, and with the aid, first, of his subcommittee, and then of the full Committee on the Judiciary, to bring to the Congress and the country a revised Federal antilynching bill which now stands awaiting action on the Calendar of the Senate, where it challenges the attention and the best thought of all of our people. I feel that I cannot, and should not, let this occasion go by without paying this deserved tribute to the notable constructive service rendered in this connection by the Senator from Indiana.

The bill reported to the Senate, which is the Wagner-Costigan bill, in an amended form, recognizes the fact that a lynching, wherever it may occur under the American flag, is a crime against the Nation; that usually local legal processes are subservient to local influences and powerless to purge the wrong that is inflicted, and that if there is to be any redress at all, and if right is to be vindicated, it must be done by the long and strong arm of the Federal Government. As a Democrat, believing fundamentally in local self-government, I am strongly opposed, as a rule, to the Federal Government injecting itself into local affairs, but when there is no other way to protect society from foul and unspeakable crimes, I am in favor of the Federal Government taking hold. As a last resort only would I ever favor such action.

The theory of the proposed law, under which the United States Government would take control over punishment for lynchings, is succinctly set forth in section 2 of the bill introduced by Senator VAN NUYS from his committee, as follows:

If any State or governmental subdivision thereof fails, neglects, or refuses to provide and maintain protection to the life or person of any individual within its jurisdiction against a mob or riotous assemblage, whether by way of preventing or punishing the acts thereof, such State shall by reason of such failure, neglect, or refusal be deemed to have denied to such person due process of law and the equal protection of the laws of the State, and to the end that the protection guaranteed to persons within the jurisdictions of the several States, or to citizens of the United States, by the Constitution of the United States, may be secured, the provisions of this Act are enacted.

Under this bill any official, such as a sheriff, who fails or refuses to make all diligent efforts to protect his prisoner shall be liable to a fine of $5,000 and imprisonment not exceeding 5 years. An official or employee who conspires with a mob to put a prisoner to death is subject to a sentence of 25 years in prison. If local and State courts will not act to punish lynchers, the United States district court, in the name of all of the people of the United States, shall have jurisdiction to administer punishment. The county where a prisoner is seriously injured or put to death by a mob shall be liable to the injured person or the legal representatives of such person for a sum of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 as liquidated damages, which sum may be recovered by civil action in the United States district court.

Such are the salient features of the new bill. Under its provisions the punitive processes of the United States Government will not reach out to the detriment of any innocent man, but those guilty of mob savagery will no longer go scot free. That there is imperative need of this legislation unless justice is to remain a mockery, is impressively set forth in the report submitted by Senator VAN NUYS, as follows:

Twenty-eight lives, sacrificed at the hands of lynchers in 1933, supply the proof of the continuing practice of this shocking type of crime. The complete failure of the governments of those States involved to apprehend and punish the perpetrators of crimes, established by the evidence presented, substantially supports the need for Federal legislation.

The committee believes that the bill does not propose an invasion or subversion of the rights of States. On the contrary, the proposed legislation is an aid to the several States in assuring to their citizens the equal protection of the laws, both State and Federal, to which all citizens are entitled.

When the Governor of a great State defies the moral sentiment of the Nation by proudly condoning the lynching of two miserable creatures within the borders of his Commonwealth, it is time for the United States Government to do something, and the Federal authorities will remain powerless to act until Congress passes the bill reported by Senator VAN NUYS, or something like it. The time is at hand when the statesmanship of Congress should assert itself, to correct these distressing conditions.

The descriptive powers of a Dickens or a Hugo could not conjure out of the atmosphere of fiction any more sickening instances of inhumanity and cruelty than are set forth in the voluminous hearings of Senator VAN NUYS' subcommittee, where actual facts were produced showing what heinous deeds human beings have committed in this country under the devilish inspiration of mob frenzy. It not infrequently happens that after the cringing, agonized victim is brutally put to death, evidence is discovered which establishes his complete innocence. In the name of the God who made us all, are we going to permit repetitions of that sort of thing? This is not a question of race or color. It is a question of humanity. It was brought out in the testimony that among 5,053 authenticated lynchings that have taken place in the United States from 1882 through 1934, to date, 1,438 victims have been white, and 3,513 colored. And I say it with a feeling of shame that 94 of the victims have been women. Of the 452 persons lynched in the period between 1918 and 1928, 42 were burned alive, and 32 others were subjected to treatment equally ghastly.

In addressing Senator VAN NUYS' subcommittee, Senator WAGNER well said that "the crime of lynching constitutes the most serious assault on civilization."

Mr. Speaker, we who wear the honors of congressional service are—or should be—paladins of civilization and guardians of posterity. Are our consciences so dulled and our ears so deafened to the entreaties of humanity that we are willing to permit these atrocities to go on and on?

SUSPENSION OF THE RULES

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that at this point he should recognize some gentleman to move suspensions. After we get through with them we may be able to return to the calendar. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H.R. 6166, with amendments.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to withdraw from the Treasury so much as may be necessary of the principal fund on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, under section 7 of the act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota", approved January 14, 1889, as amended, and to make therefrom payment of $25 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of Minnesota, under such regulations as such Secretary shall prescribe. No payment shall be made under this act until the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota shall, in such manner as such Secretary shall prescribe, have accepted such payments and ratified the provisions of this act. The money paid to the Indians under this act shall not be subject to any lien or claim of whatever nature against any of said Indians.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

There was no demand for a second.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two thirds having voted in favor thereof the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

REIMBURSE STATES FOR RIGHTS-OF-WAY

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 8018) to authorize payment for the purchase of or to reimburse States for local levee districts for the cost of levee right-of-way for flood-control work in the Mississippi Valley, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized, out of any money available for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes", approved May 15, 1928, to purchase from, or to reimburse States or local levee districts for the cost of, any levee rights-of-way or easements for the building of levees in the Mississippi Valley for which the United States was or is under obligation to pay under the provisions of the act of May 15, 1928, regardless of whether said States or local levee districts have furnished such rights-of-way in the past and regardless of the conditions under which such levee rights-of-way were furnished or may be furnished in the future: Provided, That after careful investigation the prices are found to be reasonable: And provided further, That payments or reimbursements for levee rights-of-way or easements conveying the privilege of building levees may be made as soon as they have been acquired in conformity with local custom or legal procedure in such matters and to the satisfaction of the Chief of Engineers.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, gentlewomen and gentlemen of the House, this legislation is proposed at the request of the Secretary of War in order to reimburse local interests for purchase of rights-of-way upon which, as the bill states, the Government is obligated to pay in the Flood Control Act.

The Flood Control Act of 1928 provides for payment by the Government for levee rights-of-way in the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River within the adopted project entirely at Government expense, with one exception now in the act.

The rights-of-way are on the south bank of the Arkansas River, in Arkansas, and the south bank of the Red River in Louisiana. The Secretary of War has requested that legislation authorize payment for these rights-of-way, which have been taken in cooperation with the Government. Nothing is requested except that which the Government is obligated to pay by the act; nothing except that which the Attorney General says the Government owes to the citizens whose lands have been taken for that purpose. This is the request of the War Department and has had favorable report of the Flood Control Committee of the House and of the Commerce Committee of the Senate.

The War Department is anxious to have this bill passed, because these levee rights-of-way were acquired at the request of the War Department, in order to expedite the work, and the local interests, the local levee boards, took the lands of the citizens, which they could do under the laws of Louisiana, at the assessed value the previous year, and by doing that they have expedited the work and they acquired the property at much less cost than the War Department could have acquired it. They ask in this bill for repayment.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Would the gentleman be so kind as to tell the House when these rights-of-way were acquired?

Mr. WILSON. During the past 3 years.

Mr. TABER. Has the process of acquiring the rights-of-way been completed?

Mr. WILSON. No. Some of the work is continuing. It will be necessary to acquire additional right-of-way.

Mr. TABER. Most of it has been completed?

Mr. WILSON. No. I would not say that the greater portion of the work has been completed. Probably it is 50 percent completed, but the Secretary of War has especially requested Congress, in order to save expense to the Government and to expedite the work, to approve this act, which gives them authority to compensate the levee boards, local interests, when, in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, it has been acquired at a reasonable cost.

As stated in his letter to the committee, the Secretary of War says these rights-of-way have been furnished at much less cost than the Government could acquire them. It is something the Government is obligated to pay. The Attorney General say so, the War Department says so, and the money is already appropriated, and you do not have to ask Congress for anything.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. When this question was before the House on the original appropriation, was it not then understood that this right-of-way was to be secured and that the Government was not to pay for the right-of-way for these levees?

Mr. WILSON. No, sir. When the act was under consideration I think everyone who is familiar with it will recall it was provided that the local interests should furnish the rights-of-way for levees on the main channel of the Mississippi River, but that there should be no local contribution for that purpose except on the main channel. These levees are not on the main channel. They are within the project, as stated in the bill, and the Government is obligated to pay for the entire cost.

Mr. PARKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. I yield.

Mr. PARKS. This does not in any way contravene or repeal existing law?

Mr. WILSON. No.

Mr. PARKS. It simply carries out the provisions of law as they now exist?

Mr. WILSON. Yes. When the project was adopted it was stated there shall be no local contribution to this project except that the States and local interests will acquire rights-of-way on the main channel of the Mississippi River, and that only.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. I want to read from the letter of the Secretary of War. It is in the report, on page 3:

> In the consideration of this claim it developed that the levee district had agreed by resolution to furnish these rights-of-way "without cost to the United States."

Now, that was my remembrance of it. That is the reason I was asking the gentleman the question. There was a long controversy in the House about the matter.

Mr. WILSON. Did the gentleman read further? Of course, I can explain that to the gentleman.

Mr. DOWELL. There was a long controversy in the House, as I recall, about this appropriation originally, and, as I remember it, there was to be no expense to the Government for the rights-of-way. In other words, if the Government would expend the enormous sum of money necessary to construct these levees, the rights-of-way were to be secured without expense to the Government.

Mr. WILSON. That was on the main channel of the Mississippi River.

Mr. DOWELL. Well, I do not understand that there was any definite place where the rights of the Government were to stop in the matter.

Mr. WILSON. The law definitely says so. This was passed up to the Attorney General:

> Is the United States obligated, under the law, to pay for levee rights-of-way in the Atchafalaya Basin, in the Boeuf Basin, and on the south banks of the Arkansas and Red Rivers in the flood-control work on the Mississippi River?
> My answer to this is "yes."

In the Flood Control Act it says there shall be no local contribution to this main project except that the local interests shall provide rights-of-way on the main channel of the Mississippi River; but it is admitted by all, including the War Department and the Attorney General, that other rights-of-way within the project should be paid by the Federal Government.

Mr. DRIVER. Will the gentleman yield to permit me to make a brief expression to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. WILSON. I yield.

Mr. DRIVER. In order to clarify the matter, because the gentleman from Iowa perhaps is calling on his memory of the conditions and matters that were mentioned in connection with the consideration of the flood project on the floor——

Mr. DOWELL. I am.

Mr. DRIVER. There was an exception made to the responsibility of the Government.

It was further agreed that on the main line of the Mississippi River levees the local interests should furnish the foundations for the levees; but in the same project was carried the responsibility of building protecting levees on certain tributaries and on the south bank of tributary streams. That was responsible for additions made on the streams that caused additions to the flood in the river that had to be protected against by levees on the main river, the rights-of-way for which levees the local interests assumed responsibility. But the act did not require the local interests to furnish the rights-of-way for the protecting levees along the flood way or on the south banks of the tributary rivers which became a part of the project. There is where the separation occurred.

Mr. DOWELL. Now, if I may make an inquiry, if the Government was responsible for securing this right-of-way, why has not that been done before this? Why has not the Government proceeded, if the Government was responsible according to the law, as the gentleman has stated?

Mr. DRIVER. They did. And that is exactly what is responsible for the bill. The Government proceeded by inducing the local interests to assist in procuring the rights-of-way that were used, for the reason that they contemplated delay in the condemnation of land, and they felt that the interests of the local people being paramount, the local people would be able to secure these rights-of-way at a much less rate per acre than the Government engineers could by condemnation proceedings; and they have. I may say to the gentleman from New York that they procured these rights-of-way at less than the actual value. In Louisiana especially, there is a law which enables the local district to procure these rights-of-way at the assessed value; but the United States Government would not be able to take advantage of this local law.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. DRIVER. I will, with the gentleman's permission.

Mr. DOWELL. Was there such an agreement with the Government?

Mr. DRIVER. The engineers in charge made the agreements, and the Secretary of War wants to carry them out in good faith.

Mr. DOWELL. Am I to understand that the gentleman states that the Secretary of War made an agreement that the Government had the power to reimburse for these rights-of-way?

Mr. DRIVER. The local engineers in charge of the projects made the agreements with respect to the rights-of-way, and the Secretary of War endorsed those agreements. As a result of the agreement the Government procured the rights-of-way at much less than they could possibly have procured them in any other way.

Mr. WILSON. Further replying to the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWELL], the Secretary of War states:

> After representation by these interests the War Department asked the opinion of the Attorney General as to whether the United States was obligated, under the law, to pay for levee rights-of-way in the Atchafalaya Basin, in the Boeuf Basin, and on the south bank of the Arkansas and Red Rivers, necessary in the prosecution of flood-control work under the act of May 15, 1928. The answer was that the United States was obligated to pay for these rights-of-way. The War Department then started to reimburse certain levee districts which had provided the rights-of-way in question.

Of course, expropriation of land by the Government is an unsatisfactory procedure. So the engineers called upon the levee boards, who would take the property of these people at the value assessed the year before. Then the work went ahead. These people ought to be paid for their land.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. GLOVER. This bill simply authorizes the War Department to pay for that which they have already used.

Mr. WILSON. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, in order fully to understand this bill we must go back to the original flood-control legislation. I think I have been in the House during the consideration of all these measures. One of the sharpest-drawn issues in the discussion of these measures has been the question of who would pay for the land on which the levees were built. As I understand it, pretty nearly all the way through it has been generally understood and was specifically stated in the first act which, I think, was passed in the Sixty-fourth Congress, that no money appropriated under authority of these acts shall be used in payment for any right-of-way for any levee, and so forth.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. From what act is the gentleman reading?

Mr. SNELL. I am reading from H.R. 14777, Public Law 367, Sixty-fourth Congress. That was the original act. That program has been followed right along down in connection with all flood-control acts and the paramount question has been as to who should pay for the ground on which the Government built the levees. It has been generally considered in connection with the passage of each individual act that the local authority should pay for land on which the levees are placed.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. But the Flood Control Act of 1928 supersedes all previous legislation with reference to the subject; and the Attorney General passing upon the matter has held that the only rights-of-way the local interests should furnish are those on the main channel.

Mr. SNELL. I do not know whether that is correct or not, but the gentleman will concede that that has been the main issue all the way through; that with the Federal Government spending hundreds and millions of dollars the local people should furnish the rights-of-way, and this is nothing more than fair.

Mr. WILSON. But I am referring to the Flood Control Act of 1928.

Mr. SNELL. If there were no question about it, why is it necessary to have this legislation at the present time? I call the gentleman's attention to the letter of the Secretary of War, particularly that portion which appears at the top of page 3 of the report:

> In the consideration of this claim it developed that the levee district had agreed by resolution to furnish these rights-of-way without cost to the United States, and the Judge Advocate General of the Army, the Attorney General, and the Comptroller General have all rendered opinions that in view of the wording of the several resolutions under which the rights-of-way were provided there is no present authority in law for payment of the claim.

Mr. WILSON. The situation was this, as the testimony showed: the Government district engineer called upon the Levee Board to furnish these rights-of-way, to expropriate them in order that they might expedite the work.

Mr. SNELL. Right there, if the gentleman will permit an interruption, the local engineers did that; but the intention at the time the law was passed was that these people should furnish the rights-of-way, and your own Secretary of War has so interpreted the act.

Mr. WILSON. No; the law specifically states that the Government shall furnish them.

Mr. SNELL. I know, and the gentleman from Louisiana and others know, that when this matter was under consideration the understanding was that the rights-of-way should be furnished by the local interests.

Mr. DRIVER. The gentleman is eminently correct so far as the levees on the main river are concerned, but this work extended beyond the main levees on the Mississippi River and provided for certain work on the Red and Arkansas tributaries.

Also protecting levees on the side of the proposed floodway were not included in the agreement of the people on the main river to provide these foundations. The people on the tributaries were not concerned as were the people on the main stream, and that responsibility was not shared.

Mr. SNELL. I thought it went clear through, and so understood it. Let me read from another place in the Secretary of War's letter:

> The act of May 15, 1928, commonly known as the "Flood Control Act" was interpreted by the War Department to mean that the United States was not obligated to pay for certain rights-of-way for the construction of levees not along the main Mississippi River.

That is the construction put on it by your own Secretary of War and applies to exactly what we have before us at the present time and, I believe, is the correct interpretation and was so understood by Congress.

Mr. WILSON. That was carried to the Attorney General and he ruled the other way.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from New York 3 additional minutes.

Mr. SNELL. If it was not necessary I maintain you would not have to have this legislation at the present time and, as I understand, the Comptroller General has ruled that we were not responsible and should not be called upon to pay for these rights-of-way.

Mr. DRIVER. May I make this further remark to the gentleman from New York that I think will be clarifying. It is absolutely necessary that we separate the responsibility, as responsibility was separated in the bill, for the Government to acquire the rights-of-way and the floodways on the tributaries. If this were not true, I can show the gentleman that it would be absolutely an inoperative bill insofar as the levees on the south side of the tributary streams are concerned. The front-line people along the main line of the river had no authority in the world to acquire and pay out the money that they levied on their properties for rights-of-way on the tributary streams.

Mr. SNELL. That is all right, but these various levee districts had the right.

Mr. DRIVER. No; I say they did not. My district is not concerned in this legislation, I will say to the gentleman. I am a bystander.

Mr. SNELL. I know the gentleman knows about the matter.

Mr. DRIVER. The levee district in Mr. WILSON's State and in my State and in Mississippi have no authority to levy and spend any money outside of the limits of their districts.

Mr. SNELL. That may be true; but, on the other hand, there was a definite understanding all along the line and your own Secretary of War said that that is the interpretation they put on the bill.

Mr. DRIVER. It was not justified, I will say to the gentleman from New York. There was not a man concerned with the preparation of this bill who thought for a moment that the liability extended beyond the main line of levees on the Mississippi River, for which they assumed full responsibility.

Mr. SNELL. Of course, I may have been mistaken, but I do not think I have been; but how does the gentleman interpret the language of his own Secretary of War?

Mr. DRIVER. I will not undertake to interpret his language.

Mr. SNELL. It shows that the Department agreed with my position.

Mr. DRIVER. I cannot interpret that, I will say to the gentleman, because I know he is wrong and the Attorney General is right.

Mr. SNELL. I suppose the War Department would know more about it than the Attorney General, because they have had full control of the work all along and are familiar with this work from the beginning.

Mr. WILSON. I was present when the controversy came up, and the Secretary of War stated that he would ask for the opinion of the Attorney General and that that would govern.

Mr. SNELL. Why does he make that statement there if he does not mean it?

Mr. WILSON. Because a controversy came up when the levee boards had agreed to furnish the rights-of-way. If they had furnished them, even though the Government was obligated to pay, the question would come up whether the money should be paid out.

Mr. SNELL. Furthermore, if we pass this bill we will pay for every one of the rights-of-way before we get through, and that was not the original intention, and I think the gentleman well knows it.

Mr. WILSON. No.

Mr. DRIVER. The main river is complete. They have discharged their full responsibility and furnished the rights-of-way. It is only these outside places that do not come within the definition of the law.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman must admit that his Secretary of War agrees with my interpretation of the law.

Mr. DRIVER. I am sorry to say that the gentleman's Secretary of War just prior to that would not have written this, because he was familiar with the language.

Mr. SNELL. I thought I knew something about it, but evidently I do not. Certainly I have followed this legislation very carefully, and I am sure in my own mind there is no obligation on the part of the Federal Government to pay these claims.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I am going to try to present this situation the way I understand it. I may not be correct, but I am going to give you the best I have.

This bill was passed and became a law on the 15th of May 1928. The War Department, according to the letter of Mr. Dern to Mr. Wilson, Chairman of the Committee on Flood Control, on February 15 last, reported just exactly what Mr. SNELL read, that the act of May 15, 1928, was interpreted by the War Department to mean that the United States was not to pay for these rights-of-way. Following this interpretation, in the sequence of events the flood districts agreed by resolution to furnish these rights-of-way and they went ahead and furnished them. Later, on June 8, 1933, the Attorney General decided that the language of the bill meant the United States was to furnish these rights-of-way. Frankly, I would say that, in my opinion, from reading the bill as carefully as I can, the United States would be in position to say to these flood districts, "The rights-of-way on those side rivers should be furnished."

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. SNELL. If the Attorney General's opinion is good—and I suppose it is the highest we have in the land—why is it necessary to bolster it up by passing a resolution of this kind at the present time? If the obligation is there now, why do we have to change?

Mr. TABER. I do not know; but I think I might be able to answer the question, and if I do not answer it correctly the gentleman on the other side will get a chance.

I think it means that these rights-of-way have been purchased by the district and the title to them is in the district. If the United States pays out this money the title would have to be in the United States, I understand, in accordance with the policy that was pursued on the main river. The side rivers furnished the rights-of-way and the United States went on and developed the levees. Then this decision comes along and there is an opportunity to get back for these districts the money that was paid out. This is the way I understand it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The gentleman understands that so far as the side rivers or tributaries are concerned, the controversy is only in the backwater areas of the tributaries of the Mississippi River. May I suggest to the gentleman that my view is that this bill is made necessary by a rather technical objection made by the Comptroller General and his objection is on the ground that when the Government engineers called for rights-of-way so that the Government could build, as it did build, the levees, the Government engineers did not know whether the Government was required to furnish the rights-of-way or not in the backwater area at the Red River and they required the local levee board to adopt a resolution that they would furnish the rights-of-way at their own expense.

The Comptroller General, notwithstanding the law and notwithstanding the opinion of the Attorney General, now says that in view of the resolution that was adopted by the local levee board that they would furnish about $500,000 or $600,000 worth of rights-of-way, he cannot approve the bill. This is clearly a technical objection because, under the law, on the adopted project the Government has to pay for these rights-of-way, as determined by the Attorney General. The bill is to comply with the technical objection made by the Comptroller General.

Mr. TABER. I am sorry I cannot yield further. It looks to me as if the district agreed with what I believe was the intention of the Congress and what I understood to be the intention of the Congress when this bill was passed.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from New York 2 more minutes.

Mr. TABER. And the district, understanding the bill just as Congress understood it, passed this resolution that it would provide this right-of-way without expense to the Government, and now they come here with a ruling from the Attorney General different from what we had all supposed the rule was to be, and they ask us to pass a bill which will allow us to turn this money over to these districts.

There is also this situation: With perhaps 50 percent of this proposition done, there is an expense presented of $652,000, and the letter from the Secretary of War tells us there will be an expense probably of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 for these rights-of-way. I do not think we ought to establish the practice of paying for these rights-of-way, and I hope the House will vote down this motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Speaker, while I formally opposed this bill in demanding a second, my purpose was to allot the time on the minority side.

I am for the bill whole-heartedly.

So far as I can see, there is no joker in this measure. The War Department engineers working on the projects involved were retarded in their efforts to get necessary land for the construction of the levees. Under article XVI of the Constitution of the State of Louisiana the levee boards can appropriate land immediately for levee purposes and pay for it on the basis of its assessed valuation the preceding year. So when the Army engineers found that they would be delayed in securing necessary land for levee purposes, they asked the levee boards to cooperate. The levee boards did cooperate, appropriated the land, and now they are asking, in compliance with their "gentlemen's agreement", for payment.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHASE. Gladly.

Mr. GLOVER. Something was said about the act of 1928 not providing for this. Section 14 provides that this is to be paid for by the Government. Let me read it:

> In every contract or agreement to be made or entered into for the acquisition of land, either by private sale or condemnation, as in this act provided, the provision contained in section 337 of the Revised Statutes, being section 42 of the United States Code, shall be applicable.

This shows that it was to be paid by the Government under the act of 1928.

Mr. CHASE. In connection with the point just made by the gentleman from Arkansas, you will find that this bill provides—

> That the Secretary of War is authorized * * * to purchase from, or to reimburse States or local levee districts for the cost of any levee right-of-way or easements for the building of levees in the Mississippi Valley for which the United States was or is under obligation to pay under the provisions of the act of May 15, 1928—

Just quoted.

This bill is not in conflict with the act of 1928. On the contrary, this bill is based squarely upon the 1928 act.

Now, in proof of some of the statements made by the proponents of this bill, I quote from the letter of March 4, 1929, from the United States Army engineers to the president of the Tensas Basin Levee Board:

> As your board has been informed, the levees on the south bank of the Arkansas River head the priority list for work in this district. If we can secure rights-of-way, we will complete the south bank line in about 3 years to the new grade and section. * * *
> My assistants are completing the surveys, including detailed plats and descriptions of the rights-of-way. I am obtaining abstracts of title and endeavoring to negotiate a fair price with the owners. If a reasonable price can be reached, I will ask the owner for permission to proceed with the work under a written guaranty that the United States will pay him the agreed price when the abstract of title is accepted by the Attorney General. If the owner refuses to allow this, then it would be most helpful if your board would purchase the right-of-way, guarantee it to the United States as in the past, and be reimbursed in full value as soon as approval can be officially obtained.
> Will you kindly put this matter before your board and advise me if they will assist * * *.

And so forth. And we are coming here today to ask for curative action because of a purely technical provision in the levee boards' resolutions that these rights-of-way shall be "furnished without cost."

These resolutions were drafted by the Army engineers. With a friendly, helpful, cooperative spirit the Army engineers and levee boards were working together. The Army engineers suggested the resolutions, drafted them, the levee boards acted on the resolutions, and seized the lands for use of the Army engineers in constructing the levees.

Now, what is the situation here? Under article XVI of the Constitution of Louisiana, payment for lands seized for levee purposes can be made on the basis of the assessed valuation for the preceding year. I have here certified copy of section 6 of article XVI of the State Constitution of Louisiana, and quote therefrom as follows:

SEC. 6. Lands and improvements thereon hereafter actually used or destroyed for levees or levee drainage purposes shall be paid for at a price not to exceed the assessed value for the preceding year.

There is no joker in this bill. It is a good, clean, honest business proposition. Through the cooperative help of the levee boards, this land was seized and used for levee purposes. Payment for the land was made with certificates of indebtedness, which have not been redeemed. Because the interest has been in default, the paper has depreciated and thus these owners have had almost nothing for their land which was seized.

On the contrary, the land was taken for possibly 40 percent of its real value, but since the certificates of indebtedness have depreciated some 60 percent, actual payment to the owners, even if the certificates could be sold now, would represent only about one fifth the full and true value of the land. It is a shameful situation.

The Federal Government, even if it reimburses the levee boards as provided in this bill, will secure the land at a saving of several hundred thousand dollars.

Now, the levee boards cannot pay for the lands they have taken, even at the lower price. They come here in compliance with the promises made them by the representatives of the Government, asking to be reimbursed for the land they furnished to the Army engineers for levee purposes.

Mr. WILSON. This request that they be reimbursed came from the Corps of Engineers—the district engineers.

Mr. CHASE. It came from the Army engineers.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHASE. Certainly to my leader.

Mr. SNELL. In the letter of the Secretary of War, he says:

In the consideration of this claim, it develops that the levee district had agreed by resolution to furnish these right-of-way "without cost to the United States."

Is not that an admission here that the people agreed to give them this right-of-way? What does the language mean?

Mr. WILSON. That was the Levee Board.

Mr. SNELL. Was not it the understanding that they should be furnished free? He says this was for the relief of the people, and they agreed to furnish it free.

Mr. WILSON. The letter from the district engineer——

Mr. CHASE. The unfortunate use of that phrase by the Army engineers in drafting the resolutions is what necessitated this bill. They should not have been in the resolution, but they are there.

Now, in conclusion I desire to quote from the Attorney General of the United States in a letter written under date of June 8, 1933, to the Secretary of War, upon the exact point before us here. He says:

Your first inquiry is as follows: Is the United States obligated, under the law, to pay for levee rights-of-way in the Atchafalaya Basin, in the Boeuf Basin, and on the south banks of the Arkansas and Red Rivers in the flood-control work on the Mississippi River? My answer to this is "Yes."

I quote now from the Secretary of War's letter of November 9, 1933, to the Comptroller General. He said in part:

The facts are as follows: Section 4 of the Flood Control Act of May 15, 1928, provides that the Secretary of War may acquire lands, easements, or rights-of-way needed for the project by condemnation, purchase, or donation. When the Department first undertook the construction of levees on the south bank of the Red River and in the Boeuf and Atchafalaya Floodways it attempted to acquire rights-of-way for such levees by purchase or condemnation. It was met with demands for exorbitant prices, coupled with injunction suits designed to force payment for flowage rights over the lands within the floodways. When the difficulties over land matters became apparent, the Chief of Engineers decided that efforts by the United States to purchase or condemn such levee rights-of-way should be stopped, and that available funds would be applied first to the construction of such levees at places where rights-of-way were provided by local interests under the more expeditious procedure provided by the State laws.

Thus we have a plain, candid statement of facts. The War Department had authority to buy or condemn the lands. Complying with the requests of Army engineers, the levee boards acted for the engineers, securing the necessary acreage in a fraction of the time in which the Army could have purchased or condemned and for a fraction of the amount which the War Department would of necessity have paid. Now the War Department desires to pay, and the Attorney General says that it should pay. This bill is before you today to cure the difficulty caused by the mischievous words in the resolution.

The bill should pass on its merits, and I urge that you give it your support and your vote.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEAR].

Mr. DEAR. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I was not a Member of this body in 1928, when the Flood Control Act was passed, but I will say that I was attorney for a Louisiana levee board for 13 years, and I know something about this situation. If the gentlemen from New York knew the circumstances surrounding this matter, they would not vote against this bill.

The gentleman across the aisle, Mr. CHASE, of Minnesota, who sat in the committee hearings and who knows the facts in this case, has just addressed you and told you he was for this bill.

When these resolutions in question were passed by the levee board in the State of Louisiana, providing that the land be given without cost, let me tell you gentlemen that I know, and it was shown before the Flood Control Committee, that these resolutions were drafted by the Army engineers, who told the levee board we would be reimbursed by the Federal Government, because under the law the Government was obligated to pay for them. You ask why did they not proceed to get these rights-of-way. Let me answer that. For the United States Government to obtain these rights-of-way it meant long delays and months of investigation to cure land titles plus condemnation proceedings in some cases. Where it would cost $70 to obtain a little piece of land, it would cost $500 to perfect the title. Furthermore, the landowner in many cases would wait 5, 10, or 15 years to get paid for his land. What did they do?

The Army engineers said this to my people:

Your levees are weak. You may perhaps be flooded by the next flood. We cannot agree with the landowner. Can't you acquire the rights-of-way for us? You can obtain them by paying the assessed value for the preceding year.

That was true under the clause of the Constitution which was just read to you by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHASE]. Under a "gentleman's agreement" of which I know, the levee boards purchased these rights-of-way and gave to the landowners certificates of indebtedness which the boards cannot now pay. When we come to the Government for reimbursement under the understanding had with the Army engineers a technical objection was raised that because of the language used in the resolutions, placed there by the engineers, not by the board, the Government is now prevented from reimbursing the districts for the rights-of-way. I deeply regret there is not sufficient time to present this bill. It cannot be done in 3 minutes, the time allotted me.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEAR] has expired.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker. I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, this is a meritorious bill, in my judgment, and it should pass. The bill provides that the Government is not liable for any amount whatsoever except that provided in the Flood Control Act of 1928, and is intended to provide that the Government pay for the rights-of-way for certain relief levees along the Red and Arkansas Rivers. No additional authorization is called for nor any additional appropriation required. Under the Flood Control Act of May 15, 1928, the rights-of-way or foundations for all levees along the main river are to be furnished by the local interests. Those rights-of-way have been furnished at an expense of something like $8,000,000. The Flood Control Act provides for certain exceptions, where the local interests are not required to furnish the rights-of-way. Near the mouth of the Arkansas River, near the mouth of the Red River, General Jadwin, the author of the project, said the Government should build special relief levees and pay for the rights-of-way. The Government acquired and paid for certain of those rights-of-way in the Atchafalaya area, but when they came to the upper stretches of the backwater area of the Red River, the Government said to the local levee board in substance, "Unless you pay, and provide rights-of-way, we will build the levees elsewhere first." The levee boards, for their own protection, agreed to furnish those rights-of-way, and issued their notes therefor to the amount of $652,736.79, as disclosed by the hearings and as shown by the report of the Flood Control Committee. They are not able to pay it. They have tried to pay it. As suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], the Government has acquired and has agreed to pay the remainder of the two or three million dollars involved in the bill, because the local interests did not adopt the resolution that was adopted by the particular board along the Red River which agreed to pay the said sum by resolution spread on its minutes, and there can be no technical or other objection to the amount involved except said sum of above $652,000.

To cover the whole situation, however, the War Department redrafted the bill that was introduced to authorize the owners to be reimbursed for said sum of $652,000. It strikes me that inasmuch as the bill does not provide for any new appropriation, that inasmuch as both the Secretary of War and the Attorney General say it was provided in the Flood Control Act of 1928, that the Government should pay for these rights-of-way, the people down there ought not to be estopped to ask that they now be paid because the Board adopted a resolution but cannot pay the owners. If that resolution had not been adopted, if the Board had not agreed to furnish these rights-of-way, the probability is that damages aggregating millions would have been done by floods resulting from inadequate levees.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman says that the Secretary of War and the Attorney General say we are under obligation. How does the gentleman account for what he states in his own letter to the chairman of the committee, that their interpretation of the act is that the Government is not obliged to pay for this?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I say to the gentleman that notwithstanding the Corps of Engineers paid for certain rights-of-way in this area, farther up the Red River they took the position at first that the Government was not liable, so these local interests provided the rights-of-way, but subsequently the Attorney General said the Government was liable, as shown by the report.

Mr. SNELL. But the Secretary of War says their interpretation is that we are not responsible for the payment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is the interpretation of the War Department at the time the levees were constructed, but not now. The Secretary of War, as shown by the hearings and his report to the committee, drafted and recommended the passage of the pending bill.

While the local interests are required to furnish rights-of-way along the main Mississippi River, which they have done at enormous expense, near the mouth of the Arkansas and the mouth of the Red Rivers, the adopted project provides that the Government pay for the costs of certain relief levees to prevent double taxation against the local interests, and the bill effectuates the intention of the Flood Control Act of 1928.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SNELL) there were ayes 42 and noes 12.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is not a quorum present. The roll call is automatic.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 220, nays 63, not voting 147, as follows:

HOME OWNERS' LOAN BONDS

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the home owners' loan bond guarantee bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has a conference report been agreed upon?

Mr. STEAGALL. It has.

Mr. BLANTON. What was done with the so-called "Norris amendment"?

Mr. STEAGALL. It was very happily disposed of.

Mr. BLANTON. Happily disposed of according to the wishes of some Senators or the House?

Mr. STEAGALL. The conferees were obedient to the wishes of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will continue the call of the Consent Calendar.

NATIONAL ARCHIVES

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill (H.R. 8910) to establish a national archives of the United States Government, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if the bill is entirely agreeable to him?

Mr. LUCE. It is. This bill is the result of long studies by representatives of the Library of Congress, and I think in all its details the bill now meets the approval of everybody who is interested in the subject.

Mr. ELTSE of California. It provides that appointments may be made without regard to the Civil Service Act.

Mr. LUCE. That is the situation.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established a commission to be known as the "National Archives Commission", to be composed of the Secretaries of each of the executive departments of the Government (or an alternate from each department to be named by the Secretary thereof), the Chairman of each of the Senate and House Committees on the Library, the Librarian of Congress, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, and the Archivist of the United States.

SEC. 2. There is hereby created and established the National Archives, which is hereafter to be known as the "National Archives of the United States", for the purpose of receiving, preserving, and supervising the use of certain Government papers and records as set out in sections 3 and 4 of this act. The head of the National Archives shall be known as the "Archivist of the United States", who shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Archivist is authorized to appoint assistants, officers, and other employees as he may deem necessary.

SEC. 3. The source of material to be transferred to the National Archives of the United States (hereinafter referred to as the "National Archives") shall consist of records, documents, and manuscripts now in the custody of or having their origin in the executive departments, independent offices, and any and all other agencies of the Federal Government.

SEC. 4. The National Archives Commission (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission") shall define the classes of material which may be transferred to the National Archives and establish rules and regulations governing such transfer. The executive departments, independent offices, and other governmental agencies shall, in all cases, submit in advance to the Archivist descriptive lists, or inventories, of the records to be transferred to the National Archives.

SEC. 5. All materials and records within the definition of the Commission may, subject to the approval of the departments, offices, and agencies from which it is to be drawn, be transferred at any time and without regard to the date of such material and records, on requisition of the Archivist: Provided, That after 5 years from the beginning of this Commission the approval of the departments, offices, and agencies, from which such material is to be drawn, shall not be necessary, except in the case of material bearing dates within 50 years prior to the then dates, and thereafter within 50 years prior to the date of requisition.

SEC. 6. The Archivist shall receive, store, classify, arrange, list, index, or catalog all matter received by him, repair and bind the same when needed, and perform all other activities judged needful for the proper preservation and service of the record property in his custody. In consultation with the Commission, the Archivist shall prescribe rules and regulations governing examination and consultation of the record property in his custody, as he may deem wise: Provided, That any head of an executive department, independent office, or other agency of the Government may, for limited periods, exempt from examination and consultation by officials, private individuals, or any other persons such confidential matter transferred from his department or office, as he may deem wise.

SEC. 7. The National Archives may also receive, store, and preserve motion-picture films and sound recordings pertaining to and illustrative of historical activities of the United States Government, and in connection therewith maintain a projecting room for showing such films and reproducing such sound recordings for historical purposes and study.

SEC. 8. (a) The Commission is hereby authorized to appoint a committee to advise on publishing historical material, such committee to be known as the "Committee on National Historical Publications." The membership of this committee shall consist of the Archivist of the United States (who shall be chairman); the Historical Adviser of the Department of State; the Chief of the Historical Section of the War Department, General Staff; the Superintendent of Naval Records in the Navy Department; the Chief of the Division of Manuscripts in the Library of Congress; the Curator, Division of History, of the Smithsonian Institution; the president of the American Historical Association; and, in addition thereto, two other members, selected from among persons recognized as of high attainment in American history, to serve for a period of 4 years.

(b) The functions of the Committee on National Historical Publications (hereinafter referred to as the "committee") shall be to examine material in the custody of the National Archives; advise on the propriety and need for its publication; and submit plans and costs governing such publications as it may deem necessary.

(c) The committee shall also examine available historical material, governmental in origin and character, suitable for motion pictures, for radio broadcast, for sound recording, for lecture, or for any other method of disseminating information, and advise as to plans and costs of preparing such material for the end sought.

(d) The committee shall report to the Archivist, who is authorized, with the consent of the Commission, to prepare, print, publish, and/or record such material: Provided, That the annual expenditures for such purposes shall not exceed the sum of $20,000.

SEC. 9. The Archivist shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year. The members of the Commission and members of the committee shall receive no salary, but their transportation expenses and expenses incident to not more than two annual meetings of not more than 6 days' duration each shall be paid out of such funds as are available.

SEC. 10. The National Archives shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

SEC. 11. The Archivist shall submit annually to Congress a report for the preceding fiscal year covering accessions, publications, and recordings, and a detailed statement covering all receipts and expenditures.

SEC. 12. All acts or parts of acts relating to the custody, preservation, and disposition of official papers and documents of executive departments and other governmental agencies inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, section 2, line 10, a comma is placed after the word "appoint" and the following language is inserted between the word "appoint" and "assistants": "solely on their fitness and aptitude for their duties, such."

Page 6, the following section should be inserted at the top of the page:

"SEC. 10. There is hereby authorized such appropriations as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COQUILLE, COOS COUNTY, OREG.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5597, to afford permanent protection to the watershed and water supply of the city of Coquille, Coos County, Oreg.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc, That for the purpose of affording permanent protection to the watershed and water supply of the city of Coquille, Coos County, Oreg., the south half southeast quarter section 33, township 27 south, range 12 west, Willamette meridian, Oregon, containing 80 acres, being former Coos Bay Wagon Road grant land, title to which was reconveyed to the United States under the terms of the act of February 26, 1919 (40 Stat. 1179), also lot 4 (northwest quarter northwest quarter) and southwest quarter northwest quarter section 3, township 28 south, range 12 west, Willamette meridian, also north half northeast quarter section 9, township 28 south, range 12 west, Willamette meridian, is hereby granted to the city of Coquille, Oreg.; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue patent to the city of Coquille for said land: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, and other mineral deposits that may be found on the land so granted and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove same: Provided further, That said land shall be subject to all rights-of-way which the Secretary of the Interior shall at any time deem necessary for the removal of timber from any of the land, title to which revested in the United States under the act of June 9, 1916, or to which title was reconveyed to the United States under the act of February 26, 1919: And provided further, That said city shall not have the right to sell or convey the land herein granted or any part thereof or to devote the same to any other purpose than as hereinbefore described; and if the said land shall not be used for such municipal purpose the same, or such part thereof not so used, shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe all necessary regulations to carry into effect the foregoing provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, commencing with the word "the", strike out all that follows up to and including line 11.

Page 2, strike out all of line 1 and up to and including the figure 9 in line 2, inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Lot 4 and southwest quarter northwest quarter section 3".

Page 2, line 22, strike out the period after the word "States" and insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States, its patentees or their transferees, the right to cut and remove therefrom the merchantable timber, reserving to the city of Coquille when such sale is made under the provisions of the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218), a preference right to purchase the timber at the highest price bid.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OGEECHEE RIVER, GA.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Union Calendar No. 127, the bill H.R. 7793, authorizing a preliminary examination of the Ogeechee River in the State of Georgia, with the view to controlling floods.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Ogeechee River, in the State of Georgia, with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of the floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917. The most of such examination shall be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONGRESSMAN GREEN'S RECORD

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert, as part of my remarks, a printed statement of the record and services of our colleague from Florida, Hon. R. A. GREEN, who has served in the House for a number of terms very acceptably to the people of his district.

Mr. SNELL. Is the insertion of such statements in the RECORD going to become a continuous practice?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following statement of the record and services of our colleague from Florida, Hon. R. A. GREEN:

The value of a Member of Congress rests largely upon his understanding of the needs of his people and of the Nation and upon his vision to foresee the needs of the future and to meet these needs by appropriate action. His value is tested not by the number of bills introduced, but by the importance, directly and indirectly, of such bills, and their bearing upon legislation finally enacted.

During his service in Congress Mr. GREEN has proposed many bills of great importance. Among these measures are the following:

FLORIDA CANAL

Soon after he became a Member of Congress, in 1925, he introduced a bill for the preliminary examination of the proposed canal across Florida. The bill was included in general rivers and harbors bill and passed, and preliminary survey made. On February 7, 1930, he introduced H.R. 9650 to provide for physical survey of the proposed canal across Florida. It provided for the physical survey of all feasible routes. It passed in April 1930, and surveys have just been completed by Army engineers. The President is appointing a special engineering board to review Army engineers' surveys and surveys made by Public Works engineers. He has addressed the House and many waterways organizations many times upon the subject of the Florida canal. At Wilmington, N.C., October 7, 1930, speaking before the Twenty-third Annual Convention of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, in part, he said:

"Today the most important inland waterway project of the United States is the proposed canal across north Florida, connecting the Atlantic Ocean with the Gulf of Mexico.

"The canal across Florida is the missing and final link of entire waterways chain, and it is obvious that the time is not distant when this final link will be constructed."

SOLDIERS' HOME

On April 15, 1929, he introduced a bill for the establishment of a national home for disabled soldiers in the State of Florida. This bill was passed and actually led to the establishment, not only of the home in St. Petersburg, Fla., but of similar institutions in Alabama, Mississippi, and South Carolina. It was one of the most important pieces of soldiers' relief legislation ever passed.

On December 1, 1930, he introduced a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to return to Florida the silver service set donated to the U.S.S. Florida by the Florida people. The legislation was passed.

TROPHY CANNON FOR UNITED DAUGHTERS OF THE CONFEDERACY

On December 4, 1929, he introduced a bill donating by the Government two trophy cannons to Varina Davis Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, to place on the battlefield at Olustee, Fla. The bill passed, and the guns were received.

FEDERAL BUILDINGS

On December 12, 1930, he introduced a bill providing for construction of post-office buildings as an unemployment relief measure. His bill gave impetus to the gigantic Federal building program and led directly to the building of the Federal building at Lake City, Fla., and also of many other Federal buildings in Florida.

TURPENTINE EXPERIMENT STATION

On December 21, 1929, he introduced a bill directing the establishment of a naval-stores experiment and demonstration station on the Osceola National Forest in Florida. The legislation was approved and the station established at Olustee, Fla., and is giving untold benefits to the naval stores and pine-tree industries. It benefits not only Florida but the entire South.

CONFEDERATE GRAVE MARKERS

In 1928 and 1929 he introduced legislation providing for the Government to furnish tombstones or grave markers for the graves of Confederate veterans. It led to the appropriation of funds for this purpose, and today thousands of these stones have been distributed to Confederate graves throughout the country.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

On December 10, 1931, he introduced a bill providing for payment of pension benefits to widows and orphans of World War veterans, regardless of the cause of the veteran's death. The substance of this legislation passed the House but died in the Senate.

He has voted for the payment of the bonus every time it has been before the House, and he has been a consistent supporter of veterans' relief legislation. He has assisted hundreds of veterans with their claims before the Veterans' Administration and the Pension Director.

The American Legion post of his home county awarded him the Legion distinguished-service medal for 1933.

FEDERAL AIDS FOR ROADS

He has supported all legislation for Federal aid to roads, and on May 3, 1933, introduced a bill to appropriate $200,000,000 for highways. A greater amount was appropriated.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR FRUIT-FLY DAMAGES

In 1930 Mr. GREEN introduced a bill for survey of the fruit-fly losses, and in 1931, 1933, and 1934 he introduced further bills for reimbursement for losses sustained by the Florida growers during the fruit-fly eradication campaign. He has now pending before the House of Representatives H.R. 3833 (introduced Mar. 20, 1933), providing for reimbursement. This bill is based on precedent set in the foot-and-mouth disease and pink boll-worm reimbursement, and is in line with President Roosevelt's views for reimbursement. He has addressed the House urging reimbursement and has conferred with the President and Secretary of Agriculture in this behalf.

FEDERAL FARM LOANS

On March 10, 1933, he introduced a bill providing for extension of time on Federal land-bank mortgages, and for other purposes. This bill gave impetus to the administration's legislation extending time on loans and permitting additional loans by the Federal land banks throughout the country. He has also been very active for legislation providing for crop loans. On January 16, 1933, in addressing the House on this subject, in part he said:

"The fact is these crop loans are sorely needed by our growers. They are unable to obtain adequate funds from local banks to carry on their crop planting and cultivation. Their local credit in many instances is entirely exhausted.

"It is infinitely better to permit these growers loans and thus enable them to maintain themselves, than to deny them and thus throw them upon charity. My growers do not want charity; all they want is such assistance as will enable them to produce and support themselves."

MONUMENTS

On March 10, 1933, he introduced bills for monument markers for Indian Forts King and Drane, in Marion County. He has obtained departmental approval and expects favorable action.

IMMIGRATION RESTRICTION

On March 10, 1933, he introduced bills for stopping immigration into the country and for the registration of all aliens in the country. Hearings are now being held on these bills.

OLD-AGE PENSION

He has a bill pending for the payment of pensions to the aged who are without definite and sufficient income.

PAY BANK DEPOSITORS

He introduced H.R. 9018, which provides for the payment of depositors in closed National and State banks. The House Banking and Currency Committee has just recently acted favorably upon this subject.

RIVERS AND HARBORS

He has obtained Federal funds for the improvement of the harbors at Cedar Key and Fernandina and for the improvement of the Suwannee River. As a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, he has also obtained committee approval for surveys of Keaton Beach, and countless other projects, and has also obtained authorization for millions of dollars worth of improvement to rivers and harbors throughout the entire State of Florida.

In reviewing the record of my colleague Mr. GREEN, I am reminded of an address made on March 16, 1916, by former Speaker Champ Clark at the Washington Press Club reception, and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on March 17, 1916, as follows:

"It is a high honor to be a Representative in Congress, if for only one term, and with the number of terms the honor increases in geometrical rather than in arithmetical proportion. A Member's usefulness to his country should increase in the same proportion. A man has to learn to be a Representative just as he must learn to be a blacksmith, a carpenter, a farmer, an engineer, a lawyer, or a doctor.

"'Poeta nascitur, non fit'—the poet is born, not made—says Horace; but Congressmen—that is, useful and influential Congressmen—are made largely by experience and practice.

"The old Charlotte district in Virginia knew this and kept John Randolph of Roanoke in the House till he became a great national figure. Then the Old Dominion sent him to the Senate and General Jackson sent him to St. Petersburg. These are sporadic cases of similar action in other districts.

"It is an unwise performance for any district to change Representatives at short intervals. A new Congressman must begin at the foot of the class and spell up. Of course, the more brains, tact, energy, courage, and industry he has, the quicker he will get up. If he possesses these qualities, and if his constituents will keep him in the House, he is as certain to rise as the sparks are to fly upward. No human power can keep him down. It is only fair and rational to assume that every Representative's constituents desire to see him among the 'topnotchers.'

"Let us take the present House and see how long the men who hold the high places have served. I cannot name all, but will cite a few as samples.

"Mr. Speaker Cannon is serving his fortieth year. He holds the record, or, in pugilistic parlance, 'he holds the belt', for length of service in the House in our entire history. In several Congresses he was Chairman of the great Committee on Appropriations and then was Speaker 8 years, only one man, Henry Clay, having been Speaker longer.

"I am serving my twenty-second year; Minority Leader Mann is serving his twentieth year; Mr. Kitchin, Chairman of Ways and Means, his sixteenth; Mr. Fitzgerald, Chairman of Appropriations, his eighteenth; Mr. Moon, Chairman of the Post Office and Post Roads, his twentieth; Mr. Jones, Chairman of Insular Affairs and 'father of the House', his twenty-sixth; Mr. Flood, Chairman of Foreign Affairs, his sixteenth; Mr. Hay, Chairman of Military Affairs, his twentieth; Mr. GLASS, Chairman of Banking and Currency, his sixteenth; Mr. Adamson, Chairman of Interstate and Foreign Commerce, his twentieth; Mr. Stephens, Chairman of Indian Affairs, his twentieth; Mr. Slayden, Chairman of the Library, his twentieth; Mr. Henry, Chairman of Rules, his twentieth; Mr. Lever, Chairman of Agriculture, his sixteenth; Mr. Padgett, Chairman of the Navy, his sixteenth; Mr. Lloyd, Chairman of Accounts, his twentieth; and Mr. Sparkman, Chairman of Rivers and Harbors, his twenty-second. There are other big chairmanships, but these will suffice to show that as a rule the big places go to old and experienced Members, for most of the men who rank close to the chairmen are old timers. The same thing holds good with reference to members of the minority. As an illustration, Messrs. Gillett and Cooper, who are serving their twenty-fourth year, are the ranking Republicans on Appropriations and Foreign Affairs, almost certain to be chairmen thereof should the Republicans ever again have a majority in the House, as in that event, in all probability, Mr. Mann will be Speaker, unless he is nominated for President next June.

"Go through the whole list and you will find, with few exceptions, that the men of long service have the high places.

"New England and the cities of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh have understood the value of long service all along, and, having elected a fairly good man to Congress, they keep him in the harness.

"The Member of longest consecutive service is called 'the father of the House.' Five Philadelphians in immediate succession bore that honorable title—Randall, Kelly, O'Neill, Harmer, and Bingham. Then it went to Mr. Dalzell, of Pittsburgh. When General Bingham announced the death of General Harmer, his immediate predecessor as 'father of the House', he stated that the five Philadelphia 'fathers of the House' had served a total of 147 years, and he served 8 or 10 years after making that interesting statement.

"In the second and third Congresses in which I served, Maine, with only four Members, had the Speakership and the chairmanship of the great Committees on Ways and Means, Navy, and Public Buildings and Grounds—a most remarkable circumstance, giving the Pine Tree State an influence in the House and the country out of all proportion to her population and wealth. These four men—Reed, Dingley, Boutelle, and Millikin—each served in the House 20 years or more. Other States might profit by her example.

"No man should be elected to the House simply to gratify his ambition. All Members should be elected for the good of the country.

"The best rule, it seems to me, is for a district to select a man with at least fair capacity, industrious, honest, energetic, sober, and courageous, and keep him here so long as he discharges his duties faithfully and well. Such a man will gradually rise to high position and influence in the House. His wide acquaintance with Members helps him amazingly in doing things.

"I can speak freely on this subject without violating the proprieties, for my constituents have kept me here 22 years, and for 20 years have given me nominations without opposition, for all of which favors I thank them from the bottom of my heart. Their generous action and unwavering friendship have enabled me to devote all my time to the public service. I have not been compelled to spend any portion of my time in 'mending my fences.' My constituents have attended to that. God bless them."

The speech of Speaker Champ Clark is deserving of the thoughtful study of every voter of the country.

It is a nationally known fact that those districts which have retained their Representatives in Congress for the longest terms have received the best service and the greatest recognition. The present Speaker of the House, Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY, has been in Congress for 30 years. The majority floor leader has been in Congress for 25 years. The Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee—all have been Members of Congress for more than 20 years. The longer the tenure of office, the greater the service and usefulness of the Representatives. Why should a constituency exchange experience and efficiency for inexperience? The Congress since the inauguration of President Roosevelt has responded nobly to the call of duty and should receive the endorsement and approval of a Nation now upon the high road to recovery.

EXTRACTS FROM MR. GREEN'S ANNOUNCEMENT FOR CONGRESS

"My record is an open book—upon it I stand. There is nothing hidden, and your examination of it is invited. During the past 9 years as your Congressman I have done all within my power to bring to you every possible protection and assistance from our Federal Government. Possibly mistakes have been made, because we all make mistakes, and probably none are without fault. I shall be satisfied, however, if upon examination of my record you will give careful consideration to each vote cast and official act which I have performed, place the good on one side of the balance and the errors on the other side of the balance, and vote for the side which weighs the heavier. I have no fear of the outcome of such ballot, because I feel certain that you will find in my record more merit and perfection than demerit and imperfection. President Roosevelt recently said, 'I will be satisfied if I am right 75 times out of 100.' I believe you will find my record on a parity with this expressed ambition of our great President.

"I bring this high office back to you without stain or tarnish. Even my most severe critics have always admitted that I have been honest and industrious and that I have always been faithful to the interest of the plain people and loyal to my esteemed friends. I trust that it may be your desire to continue me as your Congressman at least until President Roosevelt's new-deal program has been accomplished. I have supported him 100 percent. This I will do in the future; with him I will go, down or up.

"Many of you will recall how I was criticized during my first campaign 10 years ago. The special interest and two or three hostile newspapers have continued to oppose and persecute me ever since. Their criticism has been very acute during the past 2 or 3 years, but such is to be expected during the unusual and tragic times which we are now passing. Those in public office must suffer criticism and persecution. This is one of the penalties of public office, especially during times so trying. I hold no ill will against my accusers, because they have been misled, and are now being daily misled by the whisperings of the enemy.

My committee assignments have been criticized. The facts relative to my committee assignments are: When I first came to Congress, I was assigned to the following committees: (1) Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture; (2) Railways and Canals; (3) Alcoholic Liquor Traffic; (4) Committee on Coinage. Later on I was assigned to the following committees: (5) Immigration and Naturalization; (6) Labor; (7) Public Buildings and Grounds; (8) Disposition of Executive Papers; and (9) Territories. No other House Member held more assignments, and only one or two held as many. Soon after the inauguration of President Roosevelt I was assigned to (10) Rivers and Harbors Committee. The latter committee, to Florida, is probably the most important House committee. I am Chairman of the Territories Committee, which is the only chairmanship held by a House Member from our State. I am also very near the top of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. Some of my friends had been led to believe that I held only one committee assignment—that of the Disposition of Executive Papers.

"I have also been criticized for voting for the bonus, even though we have, during the past 13 months, spent some six or seven billion dollars for direct relief and other purposes. It would be far better to pay the bonus debt with some of the funds we are spending, and I hope this will be done. I voted to pay it in full.

"There has been criticism relative to appointment of postmasters, but, after all, there can be only one postmaster in each place, and I am trying to recommend for the permanent appointment in each case a Democrat of good character and qualifications. Wherever acting postmasters are now serving, in the very near future the Civil Service Commission will hold examinations and obtain three eligibles. The permanent appointment will be made from these three. After the three are certified, in each case I shall be glad to know the desires of the local Democratic Party officials. My sole interest in these matters is to obtain a person qualified in every respect, and I am not dodging or ducking from these appointments. I am ready to recommend just as soon as the Civil Service Commission certifies the eligibles in each case. It is a very unpleasant duty to select from among one's friends, but I have no intention of dodging responsibility or duty.

"I have been criticized because one or two of my relatives have been on the Federal pay roll. In this matter you may be sure that I have complied with the law, which says a Congressman may have two clerks. The fact is I have had, since I have been a Member of Congress, from 3 to 6 clerks, and have paid them from my own pocket when the allowance for this purpose is exhausted. I have also paid rent for an office in the District out of my own pocket and have paid a secretary there during the vacations of Congress. I have made nothing out of my clerk pay roll and have no desire to do so. Suppose that I had given actual preference to relatives, I would only be following the precedent set by Vice President Garner, whose wife assisted him for many years, and President Roosevelt, who has a large number of relatives assisting in his administration. In your own business, whether it be a farm, office, or store, to whom would you give preference?

"The special interests also are criticizing me and other Congressmen for following the President, and they are calling his administration officials the "brain trust." They are calling the Congress "brainless" and otherwise severely and unfairly criticizing the Congress. All this is to be expected in times like these because the special interests are being stepped on.

"Some of our critics say we need a new dealer for the new deal. I do not see how a new dealer could deal more than 100 percent. I made almost 100 speeches, paying my own expenses, for President Roosevelt prior to the November election. Since his inauguration I have supported him 100 percent and have voted for and worked for every one of his measures.

PAYS OWN EXPENSES

"Our critics have had a great deal to say in newspapers and from the stump about Congressmen traveling on junketing trips. I have never traveled a mile on any junketing trip at the expense of the Government or at the expense of anyone except myself.

NOT FED BY LOBBYISTS

"Neither have I been dined by the special interests and the lobbyists. I have paid for every meal that I have eaten in Washington since I have been a Member of Congress except two. One of these was paid for by one of my former secretaries, Mr. Thomas H. Harris, and the other by a boyhood friend.

ANSWERS REQUESTS PROMPTLY

"I have spared no efforts or pains in my desire to be of service to my people. No constituent in all these 9 years can say that he ever asked a service within my power which I did not cheerfully perform, even though such services often kept me away from meals and needed hours of sleep. No letter, regardless of how poorly written or how humble the writer, has gone unanswered. It has given me pleasure to comply promptly with the requests and wishes of my people, regardless of the importance of such request. If I were President and possessed a vast fortune, I still would want the same friends which I now enjoy. In Holy Writ we read, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." In this I firmly believe.

HAS ANSWERED ROLL CALLS

"It is my earnest desire to meet and shake hands with each of you and personally ask you to vote for me before the primary election; but such probably will be impossible, because I feel that my first duty is to work for and guard the interest of my people here in the Capitol while the Congress is in session. Ten years ago, when you elected me, I promised you that I would answer your roll calls unless providentially hindered. It gives me much pleasure to tell you that this promise has been faithfully kept. Until very recently I never missed a single roll call or meeting of the House of Representatives. This perfect record was kept for over 8 years. On one occasion I was at the White House in conference with President Hoover and left this conference to return to the Capitol to answer a roll call. On another occasion I was confined to a Washington hospital with influenza and left my sick bed and slipped out, went to the Capitol, and answered your roll call. This record has not been made, I believe, by any other House Member or Senator, and was broken only very recently through my own very severe illness and that of a member of my family. During these trying and critical times a Congressman should be on the job here in Washington, and, believing that this is my first duty and that I can do more here working for you than I can annoying you with political speeches, I shall remain here while important matters are pending before the Congress and leave my fate in the hands of my loyal friends in the district. They have never failed me.

PARTY RECOGNITION

"During the 9 years which I have served you, all except the last 13 months has been under Republican rule. Even under Republican domination I did all that I could for legislative proposals which were for the interest of my people, and, as my record will reveal, that many comprehensive and constructive bills introduced by me were written on the statute books. With the coming-in of the Democrats I am now in a position to render greater service to my district, State, and country. The Speaker of the House and whip of the House have seen fit to appoint me as assistant majority whip, which, so far as I know, is the first party honor accorded a Florida House Member during the past half century. I am most grateful for this party honor at the hands of the Roosevelt administration.

"During my 9 years in the House I have made friendships with the Speaker, the leader, high Government officials, and Senators, which are all of great assistance to me in presenting all just claims for my constituency. With this experience and contacts I can during the next 2 years render you better service than I have ever been able to in the past.

GIVES SERVICE

"When you elected me to Congress, I promised to give up my law practice and serve no interest except the best interest of the people of the Second Congressional District. This promise has been faithfully kept, and I am giving to the people of our district the very best service of which I am capable. Many congressional offices are closed during the vacation of Congress, but your Washington office has been kept open every day except Sundays since I have been your Representative, and in addition to this I have kept for your service an office in Starke during the vacations of Congress. In these offices I have had the assistance of competent secretaries, who have cooperated for your interest. Among them are T. H. Harris, Mrs. O. W. Callahan, Miss Lois Coffee, Gerald E. Middleton, Mrs. O. J. Griffis, Mrs. F. H. Hudson, and my present secretaries, C. C. Codrington, Miss Margaret Klotz, Miss Aline Fraser, and Miss Freda Lopatin, all Democrats and residents of our congressional district. Mr. Codrington is my district secretary, and his services are at your disposal at Lake City. We have had several other typists and stenographers to assist us during the busy sessions.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS

"In my campaign 10 years ago I promised to work toward definite goals. Among these were the following: (1) To convert Muscle Shoals into a plant for the production of fertilizer. I voted for the Muscle Shoals bills twice during the Republican administration, and it was vetoed by President Hoover and President Coolidge, but under President Roosevelt I voted for the Muscle Shoals bill and he signed it. (2) Cheaper freight rates. Freight rates have been reduced and should and will be further reduced in the not distant future. (3) Increased loans to farmers. Since the Democrats came into power we passed the Federal farm bill which has loaned to the farmers of our Nation more than $1,100,000,000. (4) Federal aid to schools. The Government is now expending a greater amount in this direction. (5) Increased Federal aid for roads. Since I have been a Member of Congress we have appropriated probably five times as much for Federal roads as during any other similar period. (6) Extended hospital treatment for veterans. Hospital facilities for veterans have been about trebled since I have been a Member of Congress. (7) Restriction of immigration. We have restricted immigration about 90 percent since I have been a Member of Congress. (8) The construction of a canal across Florida. In 1927 I introduced, and the Congress passed, the preliminary-survey bill for this project. In 1930 I introduced, and the Congress passed, the physical-survey bill. Under the provisions of these two bills several routes for the canal have been surveyed. The surveys are about complete, and President Roosevelt is appointing a special committee to review surveys made by the Board of Army Engineers and surveys made by the Public Works Engineers with the hopes of harmonizing differences and constructing the canal. I urged this project before Presidents Coolidge and Hoover and have conferred seven times with President Roosevelt in this behalf. I predict that we will soon have this project authorized.

"If continued in Congress, I will work for: (1) Everything further that is possible to be done for the actual completion of the Florida canal. As a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee and as author of the survey legislation, I firmly believe if I am returned to Congress the canal will be accomplished. (2) I have pending a bill for the reimbursement of Florida growers for damage sustained during the fruit-fly eradication campaign. I will continue in this behalf until final and favorable results are obtained. President Roosevelt has recently endorsed the substance of my bill. (3) I have pending an old-age pension bill and will continue my efforts to the end that the aged who are in need are provided for. (4) I have pending a bill for the payment of depositors in closed National and State banks. If we can obtain passage of this legislation, our financial troubles will be practically over. I believe we can pass it. (5) I shall support legislation for the payment of the balance of the bonus and for reestablishing former pension and compensation benefits formerly enjoyed by our veterans. (6) I shall continue my efforts for adequate Federal assistance for public roads and public education. (7) I shall continue my cooperation and support of the President and my activity for all measures which I believe to be for the best interest of our people, and to oppose those which are not.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT INAUGURATED

"A clear understanding of the President's emergency relief program is to thoroughly approve it. In order to thoroughly understand and fully appreciate the scope and purpose of this gigantic relief program, it is well to refresh our memories of the chaotic condition which faced the American people about 18 months past. At this time business and industry was at its lowest ebb since the beginning of the depression. Agriculture was in the depths of despair; ten or twelve million idle men and women were walking the highways and streets in increasing numbers, looking for jobs. By the first of March a banking holiday had been declared in many States of the Union. The people had almost lost confidence in the ability of their Government to bring about a recovery. Economic chaos threatened the country to a more alarming extent than in the darkest days of the preceding years. Wheat had sold as low as 18 and 25 cents per bushel; cotton 5 to 6 cents per pound; and corn as low as 10 or 12 cents per bushel; in fact some of the corn growers of the Middle West were burning their corn for fuel, while the coal miners were without food and in need of this very corn for food for themselves and families. There was an abundance of wheat, corn, cotton, wool, and meats, yet millions of people hungry for the want of these foodstuffs and cold from lack of cotton and woolen garments. Granaries and warehouses were filled to capacity, yet railroad cars stood idle and rusting out in the railroad yards, and idle freight boats rode at anchor throughout the harbors of our country. Industry was paralyzed. Credit was destroyed. In fact, local credit was almost nonexistent. The old custom of 150 years ago of trade and barter and exchange was in common use. One individual would trade and barter products or commodities for some other needed product or commodity, in order to obtain cloth, food, fuel, and necessities of the body. Agriculture was on the very brink of bankruptcy. Money had either gone into hiding or was locked up in bank vaults.

"The then-remaining banks in the country were closing in alarming numbers, carrying with them the life savings of honest American citizens. Church and charity funds and the trust funds of orphans were not even spared. There was a deficit even in the Budget of our Federal Government which had occurred for the past 3 years and which aggregated over $5,000,000,000. But what was even worse than all this, there were forces of doubt, suspicion, and destruction at work in our midst which threatened our social and civic institutions and the very foundation of our Government itself. In part, these were the chaotic conditions which faced the American people in the most trying times in the peacetime history of our country; but our American Government was founded through valor and courage, and in its darkest hours it has always produced leadership. The American people have in this darkest hour of the country's history found courageous and able leadership which has come forth and proceeded unafraid. A new deal was not only required but a leader of kind heart, firm hand, and quick decision was needed to put the new deal into effect and to inspire that confidence in the American people which was all essential to recovery. Such leadership appeared in the person of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Probably the most fateful hour and fateful minute in the history of the American Republic was on the 4th day of March 1933, when in his inaugural address, he said: 'So, first of all, let me assert my firm belief that the only thing we have to fear is fear itself, nameless, unreasoning, unjustified terror which paralyzes needed effort to convert retreat into advance. In every dark hour of our national life a leadership of frankness and vigor has met with that understanding and support of the people themselves which is essential to victory. I am convinced that you will again give that support to leadership in these critical days.

"To this clarion call the American people in all walks of life have responded most nobly and are rapidly shaking off the shackles of depression. President Rooselevt is a man of action. He at once assembled the Congress into extra session and passed 12 emergency measures which have, in his own words, converted 'retreat into advance.' Time will not permit a detailed discussion of these 12 emergency measures, but I shall briefly refer to some of the more important ones. Probably the most comprehensive and timely piece of legislation enacted during the present generation was the farm relief bill .

FARM RELIEF BILL

"Some thirty million of our citizens dwell on the farms of our Nation. Every industry and every business establishment throughout the country is dependent upon the purchasing power of the farmer for its existence. The general purpose of the farm relief bill was to reestablish in the hands of the farmer greater purchasing power in order that he may consume the goods of the industrial centers, and that he may in turn aid the industrial and factory centers to purchase and utilize produce from the farms. An alarming percentage of farm property was under mortgage and bankruptcy threatened this great basic industry. Under the provisions of this legislation the sum of $200,000,000 is provided for additional farm credits, and even more far-reaching in its effect is the authorization of the issuance of $2,000,000,000 in bonds with which farm mortgages may be refinanced with the new low rate of interest to the farm owner of 4½ percent. The Congress has very recently put Government guaranty on these bonds. Farmers have been paying entirely too high a rate of interest. With 4½ or 5 percent interest and 15 to 30 years time on their mortgages they will be enabled to carry on their activities.

"In the program of farm legislation, Congress provided for the establishment and maintenance of such balance between the producer and consumer of agricultural commodities as it is hoped will reestablish prices paid to farmers so that their agricultural commodities will have a purchasing power equivalent to that they enjoyed before the war. Authority is given to the Secretary of Agriculture to bring about reduced production to increase farm-commodity prices and to negotiate market agreements with processors and handlers of agricultural commodities to accomplish the purpose of the legislation. The farm bill went far further than this. It gave control over the currency to the President. The gold clause was outlawed in public and private contracts and the President authorized to fix the gold and silver coinage ratio. It gave the President power to coin silver in unlimited quantities and to also issue new paper money. This power of inflation given to the President can be exercised, if and when, in his wisdom, it should be. He has already exercised it, but not adequately. This power of inflation given the President is bringing money out of hiding and loosening up credit. At this point I desire to commend the President for his decision in authorizing the purchase of gold. This is one of the most important acts of his administration. Since the passage of the farm bill the Federal Farm Credit Administration has made loans to agriculture in the amount of about $1,100,000,000. In the month of August alone, $50,000,000 was let out. We regret that it was necessary to loan so large an amount but are proud of the fact that our Government is going to the aid of the farmers of our country. Through the Federal Land Bank of Columbia and other Federal loan agencies, Florida is, I believe, obtaining its portion of credit. This legislation has had a telling effect upon the price of farm produce. Cotton has advanced from its low price of 5 to 6 cents to 10 to 14 cents. Corn, wheat, pork, and all the farm commodities have risen in proportion, and it is confidently believed that these commodities will rise sufficiently to reestablish in the farmers of our Nation the purchasing power realized prior to the war. Your Congressman voted for this legislation.

MUSCLE SHOALS

"Muscle Shoals had been practically idle for the past 12 years. Our Government had invested some one hundred and fifty or sixty millions of dollars in it, and this enormous investment was idle. Under the recent Muscle Shoals legislation a large number of workers are employed. The price of fertilizer to the farmers will be reduced, probably by half, and power sold at Muscle Shoals will set a yardstick for the determination of a fair and reasonable rate for electric energy throughout the country. This great Tennessee Valley will develop into one of the richest industrial sections of our country. The Muscle Shoals plant will remain available to the Federal Government for production of ammunition in the time of war. I voted for this bill and presided over the House while it was under consideration.

MONEY AND BANKING

"Under emergency banking legislation passed on the 9th of March 1933 some 15,000 banks have been reopened and are in a most liquid condition. The greatest piece of banking legislation since the passage of the Federal Reserve Act was the Glass-Steagall banking bill passed in the last days of the extra session of Congress. This legislation amends the Federal Reserve Act by empowering the Federal Reserve Board to suspend banks from the use of Federal facilities of the Federal Reserve banks for the speculative carrying of or trading in securities, or other purposes not consistent with the maintenance of sound credit conditions. It makes Morris Plan and other industrial-loan banks eligible for membership in the Federal Reserve System. It provides for the divorcement of member banks by security affiliates to prevent speculation with depositors' money. It makes provision for the prompt liquidation of closed banks for the relief of depositors and sets up a corporation to insure bank deposits, within certain limitations, in order to safeguard the depositors and to prevent further losses through the failure of banks. Frankly, I believe the insurance or guaranteeing of bank deposits in all banks throughout the United States has meant and will mean more to the future economic life of our Nation than any other piece of legislation during this generation. The first of the year 1934 saw bank deposits insured. Your Congressman voted for this bill.

SECURITIES ACT

"This act provides for Federal supervision through the Federal Trade Commission of interstate traffic in investment securities and is designed to protect the American public against further flotation of securities of doubtful value, the sale of which in recent years has cost the public many billions of dollars. The act requires that the fullest possible information concerning security issues it is proposed to market shall be filed under oath with the Federal Trade Commission, so that the prospective investor may have accurate and reliable knowledge of the business and properties on which the securities are based. Severe penalties are imposed for failure to comply with the provisions of this act. It is bringing good results. Your Congressman voted for this act.

HOME MORTGAGES

"Under the bill for the relief of home owners, persons whose homes are threatened with mortgage foreclosure may, on homes with an assessed valuation up to $20,000, refinance their mortgages at an interest rate of 5 percent, and may have 15 years in which to pay off the mortgage. Through this legislation not only have millions of families been able to save their homes but a more considerate policy on the part of private mortgage holders has been forced. The home is the very foundation of our civilization. This legislation is saving your homes. Your Representative voted for this bill.

UNEMPLOYMENT

"The reforestation bill was sent to the Congress by the President on March 21, 1933, and was promptly enacted. Under its provision some 250,000 young men have been put to work in reforestation camps and also some 25,000 unemployed ex-service men. This measure was primarily to give employment and to feed the needy. It is far better for American citizens to be permitted to earn their living than to beg for it from the hands of charity. The American ideal is that of independence and self-sustenance. As well as giving employment to the needy it is conserving one of our Nation's most important natural resources. Not only replenishing and continuing our forest, but preventing waste, floods, and destructive erosion. Would you be surprised to know that during the past 10 years erosion has destroyed 54,000 square miles of arable land—an area equal in size to all England? It has damaged 195,000 square miles of other lands, an area as large as postwar Germany. Out of our national heritage of 650,000,000 acres, 21,000,000 acres have already been destroyed through erosion. Furthermore, the reforestation service is rapidly decreasing the population of our prisons. The number of young men now being sent to prison in our country has rapidly decreased, and it is believed that opening the reforestation camps to them has diverted their minds to a higher and more noble life. Unemployment, particularly of youth, has a tendency toward mental, moral, and intellectual degradation. The reforestration program is by its good efforts directing the youth of our Nation toward brighter goals. Your Representative voted for this legislation.

RAILROADS

"The railroad provides for railroad combinations and coordination to bring the systems together and to enable the railroads to use one another's terminals and like facilities and to jointly adjust schedules and bring about savings to investors and lower rates to the shippers. Labor is protected against the loss of jobs. I supported this legislation.

TARIFF

"The President was authorized, under the provisions of the Industrial Recovery Act, to adjust tariffs and impose embargoes to meet damaging foreign competition made possible through depreciating currencies. Under the recent tariff bill he is given power to fix and adjust tariff rates in the interest of American producers and consumers. Your Representative voted for these two bills.

BALANCING THE BUDGET

"The Democratic national platform had promised a reduction of 25 percent in Government expenditures. President Roosevelt, as a candidate for the Presidency, had pledged himself and his party to the carrying-out of this proposal. Many looked upon it as an idle political gesture, but Congress, in sustaining the President, considered it a sacred pledge.

"In order to produce these economies and bring the expenditures of the Federal Government within the revenue it was necessary to cut out whole departments and to reduce the personnel in many others, cut down payments to Federal employees, and reduce the amount that was paid to veterans of all wars. This was not an agreeable task, but an unavoidable duty. Some have criticized the Economy Act, but this is the keystone of the arch of the whole recovery program. Without the savings that were made possible by the Economy Act, the financial structure of the Federal Government would have collapsed. Upon the financial strength of our Treasury, reestablished by the Economy Act, we were able to finance every reissue of bonds and were able to borrow money and have sent this money into every nook and corner of our Nation to render direct relief to the starving, to provide employment to the jobless, to prime the pump of industry, to save our people from the depths of despair. The voter should think seriously before condemning a Member of Congress for voting for the Economy Act. Representatives have no desire to do any veteran an injustice. All soldiers with disabilities should be liberally compensated. Their widows and dependents should be cared for. Spanish War veterans at this late date should not be required to prove service connection for disability. Let the reduction be on a percentage basis and the Spanish War veteran allowed to hold his former pensionable status. The injustices under the Economy Act to soldiers are being righted. I shall be glad to give my support to all just modifications of this law and Executive orders issued pursuant thereto. In this program I voted to reduce my own salary 25 percent.

NEW DEAL IN INDUSTRY AND PUBLIC WORKS

The purposes of this act were:

"1. To obtain wide remployment.

"2. To shorten the working week.

"3. To pay decent wages for the shorter week.

"4. To prevent unfair competition.

"5. To prevent disastrous overproduction.

"It appropriated $3,300,000,000 for public works. These funds are being used for public and semipublic projects, particularly self-liquidating projects. Four hundred million dollars of this amount is being expended on our highways, thus giving employment to the needy and stimulating industry generally and also giving the American people needed highways.

"Florida is getting its proportion of these funds. Counting the rivers and harbors funds, the relief funds, Public Works and Civil Works funds, Florida probably will receive $30,000,000 to $40,000,000, and counting the Florida canal, which I feel confident we are going to receive soon, it will have received more than any other State in the Union. I voted for this gigantic relief program in order that our citizens may be permitted to earn their living rather than beg for it. If it had not been for these relief funds, destitution undescribable would exist in Florida today. These funds have been almost lifesavers to our people who have been forced to work on Relief, Civil Works, and Public Works projects. Recently we appropriated another $900,000,000 to be used for this purpose, and it probably will be necessary for us to appropriate an additional sum before adjournment. President Roosevelt is not only justified but is to be commended for seeing that the hungry and helpless of our Nation are provided with employment and the necessities of life. I am supporting him in this relief program.

TIMES IMPROVING

"Business conditions throughout our country are now improving. It has improved about 20 percent since the President was inaugurated. In fact, March of this year showed greater employment, greater pay rolls, and greater sales in stores than have been had since 1929. The number of unemployed has decreased. Out of the 12,000,000 unemployed 13 months ago, more than 5,000,000 have found employment either on relief projects or in industrial establishments. Out of 89 manufacturing industries, 77 of them increased their employment during the past February, and 79 of them increased their pay roll. In February $50,000,000 worth of contracts were awarded for private building and some $53,000,000 awarded on Public and Civil Works projects. This reflects a decided increase in employment and wages earned. The Federal insurance of bank deposits has rapidly increased the amount of money on deposit in banks; the prices of farm commodities have advanced; also the value of livestock; credit is loosening up; you hear no more of banks closing—the guaranteeing of deposits has made them safe—public confidence is being rapidly restored; the wheels of industry are revolving again; trade has been stimulated. Hope is supplanting despair in the minds of our people, and constructive forces have set to work in the minds of our people, and they again have confidence.

"These improved conditions I want to see continue. This improvement has been brought about by the President's program, which I have earnestly and whole-heartedly cooperated for, and I want to see him carry it on through and place the economic life of our Nation on a sound basis. We must not make any mistakes by looking backward; we must forge on forward.

TIMES CRITICAL

"During the next 2 years at least, you will need the best representation that our district affords, because the problems now facing us are still grave. While conditions are improving, things are not at all beyond the danger point and I do not want to see the country step backward. I want to see President Roosevelt go on through with his program because he is the hope of the American people.

"While I have had 9 years' experience in Congress, I am still only 42 years of age—at the time of life when I should be able to render you the best service. This it is my desire to do, and I hope that the thinking people of our district will see fit to continue my services here. It is true that some of my friends were kind enough to suggest that I run for the Senate in the approaching primaries, but this I have declined to do because at this particular time men with experience and who will stand for right and the interest of the plain people are needed in the House of Representatives.

WILL SUPPORT PRESIDENT

"In this entire program, and in fact all the President's program, I have supported him even to the dotting of an "i" and the crossing of a "t." I hope you will not "swop horses while in the middle of a stream", at least until we have crossed over this stream of depression and critical times.

"I also voted recently to sustain President Roosevelt's veto on the pay bill. This bill would have increased my own salary $30 or $40 per month. This I could not agree to. It also would have given additional benefits to veterans. This I wanted them to have, but there was no division of the question, and I voted to sustain him in order to vote against a raise in my own salary and because it was the democratic thing to do.

"I believe in a party form of government and have always supported the nominees of our party. I hold letters from the leaders of our party in 1928 and 1932 commending my efforts for the Democratic ticket. I do not believe the Democrats of my district would expect me to work for and vote for a Democratic President and then run out on him the first time the water got deep. I cannot vote with the Democrats one day and the Republicans the next day. If you expect me to do this, I am sorry, because I have on every occasion voted with the Democrats and will continue to do so, because, after all, the Democratic Party is the only party that has cherished the hopes and the ideals of our great Southland. I am firm in my belief in the correctness of its principles, and I voted to sustain his veto.

"If you believe in President Roosevelt and his program, I want you to vote for me. If you endorse him, then I hope you will do it by returning me to Congress, but do not return me to Congress under any misapprehension, because I am firm in my conviction that he is the friend of the common people and upon him we may depend, and that in spite of the challenge of big money and Wall Street he is standing with us and is proceeding unafraid. Big money and the special interest, are trying also to defeat me. They are trying to betray and mislead my friends into voting against me. Why? Because I have stood by the masses and the interest of the rank and file. This I will do as long as I live. I cannot forget my own handicaps and struggles in trying to obtain an honest education. I plowed, hoed, dug ditches, chipped pine gum, and cut crossties. I can do it again if necessary. I believe in the dignity of labor and in the majesty of toil. There is no aristocracy except that of honor and no rabble save that of crime. I honor the man who earns his living honestly by the sweat of his brow. For his betterment my ark covenant is launched. President Roosevelt will have my vote and support as long as I am your Congressman, and I now call on my friends throughout the Second Congressional District to rally to his banner and to my support, and continue my services to him by returning me to Congress. Every victory I have won and every worth-while accomplishment has been made possible only through the efforts of my loyal friends. You have stood by me in the past, and never permitted me to go down in defeat. My faith in you abides.

[Letter from Chairman STEAGALL, of Banking and Currency Committee]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., April 13, 1934.

Hon. R. A. GREEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR LEX: Our committee has before it your bill (H.R. 9018) for the payment of depositors' balances due on deposits in closed banks throughout the country. You will be interested in knowing that after consideration, our committee has favorably reported largely the substance of your bill. In this matter you have been very helpful.

You are assured that we appreciate the good support which you have given our committee since the inauguration of our President. I have particularly in mind your valuable support for the bank-deposit guaranty legislation, the Goldsborough currency expansion measure, and the home owners' loan bill.

With very high personal esteem, I am, sincerely yours,

HENRY B. STEAGALL, Chairman.

[Letter from Chairman MANSFIELD, of Rivers and Harbors Committee]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., April 12, 1934.

Hon. R. A. GREEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR LEX: I was interested recently to learn that President Roosevelt has agreed to appoint a special board to review the report of the Public Works engineers and the report of the Army engineers on the proposed canal across Florida.

In 1927 our committee reported and the Congress passed your bill for the preliminary survey of this project, and, again, in 1930, we approved your bill for the physical survey, and I note with much interest the great progress you are making toward the realization of this important improvement, and the national interest your have aroused for it.

I take this opportunity also to extend to you my appreciation for the good cooperation you have given me since you have been a member of our committee.

Sincerely your friend,

J. J. MANSFIELD, Chairman.

Letter from Chairman DOUGHTON, of Ways and Means Committee

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., April 13, 1934.

Hon. R. A. GREEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: We have before us your bill (2840) "to prohibit the importation of articles from certain countries, and for other purposes." Said bill for the protection of our phosphate and other industries from foreign monopoly products. You may be assured that this matter will have the committee's consideration. We are mindful of your deep interest in this matter and in the protection for fruits, vegetables, and tobacco, which are grown extensively in your State.

Your cooperation with the committee and with our Democratic majority has been most helpful. This is particularly so since the inauguration of our leader, President Roosevelt. He needs from all loyal Democrats the whole-hearted support which you are giving him.

With cordial good wishes, I am, sincerely yours,

R. L. DOUGHTON, Chairman.

Letter from Majority Whip GREENWOOD

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., April 12, 1934.

Hon. R. A. GREEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: Under separate cover I am sending to you a copy of the New York Times, which, in a comprehensive way, deals fairly with President Roosevelt's administration.

I am quite sure that the American people realize that more beneficial legislation has been passed since President Roosevelt's inauguration than in any other 13 months in the history of our Republic.

In all of the President's program you, as a Member of the House, and particularly as assistant Democratic whip, have played a most important part. Your experience in the House of Representatives has given you acute information on all national affairs, which enables you to intelligently assist in the preparation and carrying-out of our legislative proposals. Your regularity of attendance at sessions of the House and your wide friendship among its Members add to your valuable services.

I desire to take this opportunity of extending to you my appreciation for your good and essential cooperation.

With very kind personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR H. GREENWOOD, M.C.,
Majority Whip.

Letter from Chairman Farley, of Democratic National Committee

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE,
Washington, D.C., June 16, 1933.

Hon. R. A. GREEN,
House Office Building, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I want you to know that I greatly appreciate the support you gave the administration program during the session just closed. I feel certain the people of the country generally realize that more beneficial legislation was passed at this session of Congress than ever before in the Nation's history.

For the part you played in these remarkable accomplishments I want you to know that I am personally grateful.

With best wishes, I am, sincerely,

JAMES A. FARLEY, Chairman.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we expect to take up the District of Columbia appropriation bill; but before that there will probably be two conference reports taken up, one of which may be discussed the full hour or perhaps longer. It is known on the bill as "the Bankhead cotton control bill." The other conference report is on the bill guaranteeing the principle of home-loan bonds.

I have been requested by the chairman of the committee who will handle the District of Columbia appropriation bill to ask the House for unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow. There will be more or less extended debate upon the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and we should like to get through with it this week and perhaps be able to adjourn over Saturday.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman from Tennessee tell us what the program is to be for the balance of the week?

Mr. BYRNS. Immediately after the disposition of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, unless something unforeseen intervenes, there will be a rule making in order, under the general rules of the House, the bill of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] with reference to the citizenship of women in foreign countries.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is also hoped that the Ellzey bill, providing for an extension of vocational education, may possibly be brought before the House tomorrow.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does the Bankhead bill in its present form contain the same provision it did when it left the House designating what amount of produce other than cotton the farmers of this country can plant?

Mr. BYRNS. I am unable to inform the gentleman. I do not know what is in the conference report.

Mr. JONES. I do not know that I caught the full import of the gentleman's question.

Mr. RICH. As I understand it, the cotton bill not only regulates the amount of cotton that can be planted, but also all other commodities, giving the power of a czar over the American farmer to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. JONES. No; it does not do that.

Mr. RICH. Can the Department regulate commodities other than cotton under this bill?

Mr. JONES. No. They are only allowed under the bill to regulate what shall be planted on the idle acreage rented or leased in the reduction program to this particular commodity, so far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. RICH. That was in the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. JONES. There was a provision in the bill which authorized him in the making of contracts to require that there be no expansion in competitive crops, but even this provision has been eliminated.

Mr. BOILEAU. Do I understand the amendment which required that the production of other commodities shall not be expanded has been withdrawn?

Mr. JONES. The particular provision that was written in at the gentleman's request remains in there.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. The dairy amendment stays in?

Mr. JONES. Yes; the extension on the idle acreage provision stays in the bill.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

GREAT SMOKY NATIONAL PARK

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 157, the bill (H.R. 7360) to establish a minimum area for the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman that several of our colleagues over here have bills on the calendar and want to return to a consideration of them.

Mr. GOSS. I may say to the gentleman we are going to save $300 a day, we have been informed in the Appropriations Committee, if we pass the bill at this time. The proponent of the bill has taken the matter up with the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee and is agreeable to accepting an amendment. It is a matter of saving some $300 a day to the Government on account of an injunction in respect of some national-forest lands.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, we have had similar requests from at least a half dozen Members on this side. It was my understanding we were to adjourn before the last bill was reached. I am sure, in deference to the other Members and to my colleagues on the committee, I shall be forced to object.

Mr. GOSS. May I point out in this particular instance that there is a saving of $300 a day and that we will not have another Consent Calendar day for 2 or 3 weeks? This bill has been agreed to as far as the objections of the Appropriations Committee are concerned.

Mr. TRUAX. I will say to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss] that, so far as I am concerned, I will withdraw my reservation of objection with the understanding that this will be the last bill considered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an area of 400,000 acres within the minimum boundaries of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, acquired one half by the peoples and States of North Carolina and Tennessee, and the United States, and one half by the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial in memory of Laura Spelman Rockefeller, be, and the same is hereby, established as a completed park for administration, protection, and development by the United States, and so much of the act of May 22, 1926 (44 Stat. 616), as is inconsistent herewith is hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. That all funds heretofore allocated and made available by Executive order or otherwise or which hereafter may be allocated and made available for the purchase of lands for conservation or forestation purposes within the maximum boundaries of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park as authorized by the act of May 22, 1926, be, and the same are hereby, made available for the purchase of said lands for park purposes and/or in addition to the minimum acreage established by section 1 of this act, notwithstanding any prohibition to the contrary in section 1 of the act of May 22, 1926, aforesaid, and any land heretofore purchased within said area under said funds is hereby made a part of said park.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Goss: Strike out all of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof: "Section 2: That all lands purchased from funds heretofore allocated and made available by Executive order or otherwise or which hereafter may be allocated and made available for the acquisition of lands for conservation or forestation purposes within the maximum boundaries of the Great Smoky Mountain National Park as authorized by the act of May 22, 1926, be, and the same are hereby, made a part of the said park as fully as if originally acquired for that purpose."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A joint resolution of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and under the rule referred as follows:

S.J.Res. 83. Joint resolution amending Public Resolution No. 118, Seventy-first Congress, approved February 14, 1931, providing for an annual appropriation to meet the quota of the United States toward the expenses of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 606. An act to authorize the waiver or remission of certain coal-lease rentals, and for other purposes;

S. 1075. An act for the relief of Walter Thomas Foreman;

S. 1076. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Franklin Surety Co.;

S. 1091. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgment on the claims of Edward F. Goltra against the United States arising out of the taking of certain vessels and unloading apparatus;

S. 1934. An act conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of four-masted auxiliary bark Quevilly against the United States, and for other purposes;

S. 1935. An act to amend the act of March 2, 1929, conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of the S.S. W. I. Radcliffe against the United States, and for other purposes; and

S. 2315. An act to provide for the settlement of damage claims arising from the construction of the Petrolia-Fort Worth gas-pipe line.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p.m.), in accordance with its previous order, the House adjourned until Tuesday, April 17, 1934, at 11 o'clock a.m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

408. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting a supplement to a letter dated March 22, 1934, recommending that Mr. Charles M. Perkins, postmaster at Seattle, Wash., be permitted to credit his postal account in the sum of $15,997.66, instead of $14,897.66, as previously recommended, to reimburse him for losses sustained in a robbery and through admitted embezzlement of a former cashier, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

SENATE

TUESDAY, APRIL 17, 1934

The Chaplain, Rev. Z. Barney T. Phillips, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Most loving Father, whose mercies are from everlasting to everlasting, unto whom we flee for refuge in the blessed certainty of Thy love, be Thou our helper in this our time of need; assuage the grief of every burdened soul, and pour Thy consolations into our hearts, for Thou knowest our frame, Thou rememberest that we are but dust. Sanctify to us this day these bonds of human sympathy, and grant that by the indwelling of Thy tenderness and mercy we may have a richer, fuller understanding of the purpose of our high calling.

O Thou Christ of God, shepherd of our souls, we intrust all who are near and dear unto us to Thy never-failing care for this life and the life to come, knowing that Thou wilt do for them even more than we can desire.

Lord, Thou art our Shepherd,
Guide us lest we stray,
Gather us when the night cometh
Into Thy fold for aye.

Amen.

I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] occasioned by a death in his family, the absence of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] caused by illness in his family, the absence of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] on account of personal illness, and the absence of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] are necessarily absent.

Mr. FRAZIER. I wish to announce that my colleague the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] is necessarily absent from the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

DEATH OF FORMER SENATOR JOHN J. BLAINE

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it is with a heavy heart that I announce the untimely death of the Honorable John J. Blaine, who but recently was an active Member of the United States Senate.

He gave a lifetime of devoted service to the State of Wisconsin and to the Nation. He was a man of great native ability. He brought to the ideals of government, in which he believed and for which he fought, a courage and persistency that knew no defeat.

He was truly a pioneer in the progressive movement in Wisconsin, and the span of his public life approached nearly 40 years. John Blaine entered the Legislature of Wisconsin in 1903, after having served his city as mayor for four terms. In the State Senate of Wisconsin he played an active part in the enactment of progressive legislation. As attorney general, and as Governor of Wisconsin for 6 years, and in the United States Senate he was always an effective advocate of progressive principles and a scourge to wrong, corruption, and injustice in every form. He was eminently qualified for the high position to which President Roosevelt appointed him, and he did very effective work for the public interests in that capacity.

I first knew John Blaine as one who enjoyed the confidence and affection of my father. We were intimately associated as colleagues for 6 years in the Senate, and the admiration I held for him in boyhood ripened into a mature appreciation of his sterling character. I take great consolation in the enduring monument of splendid public service he has left and in the privilege of his friendship.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I, too, wish to say a word about former Senator Blaine. I served with him upon committees of the Senate. In my 12 years in this body I have never known a man who was more diligent, more attentive to his duties, or more intelligent in their discharge than was Senator Blaine.

It is a matter of deep regret to us on this side of the Chamber, too, that we have lost this friend. I want to add just this word of appreciation of the life and activities of Mr. Blaine.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I wish to say a word, inspired by the untimely death of the man whom I had the honor to succeed in this body as one of the representatives of the State of Wisconsin.

In my opinion, the country at large and our State of Wisconsin in particular have suffered a very great loss in the passing of former Senator John Blaine. His independence of thought, his integrity, and his courage appealed to the citizens of our State, not only those who were alined with him politically but some of those who were his strongest political opponents.

I desired to take this moment to express my deep sense of loss at the passing of my friend.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

S. 2571. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to arrange with States or Territories for the education, medical attention, relief of distress, and social welfare of Indians, and for other purposes; and

S.J.Res. 15. Joint resolution extending to the whaling and fishing industries certain benefits granted under section 11 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended.

TELEGRAM FROM THE NEW ORLEANS COTTON EXCHANGE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a telegram from the board of directors of the New Orleans (La.) Cotton Exchange, stating "The New Orleans Cotton Exchange wishes to go formally on record as deploring and resenting the unfounded statements concerning its management contained in the speech of April 13 of the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], as reported in the United Press dispatch of that date", which was ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN SENATE,
Albany, April 3, 1934.

By Mr. Fearon

Whereas the State of New York was allocated some $22,300,000 in funds for highway work as a result of the National Industrial Recovery Act in 1933; and

Whereas these funds were provided for the purpose of giving additional employment on highway work in the State of New York; and

Whereas practically all of this sum has been either expended or placed under contract; and

Whereas the New York State budget for the next fiscal year provides only the sum of $5,000,000 for construction and reconstruction work on highways in this State; and

Whereas most of this sum will be used by the State for maintenance of present highways and bridges; and

Whereas there will be practically no new State highway work undertaken during the year 1934; and

Whereas the highway program made possible through the Federal allotment of $22,300,000 last year will be completed during the summer months of 1934, thus releasing thousands of workers directly and indirectly employed as a result of this progress; and

Whereas the release of these thousands of workers from the highway industry will greatly intensify the unemployment situation in nearly all sections of the State unless additional Federal funds are made available with which to prosecute a continued program of highway employment during the current year: Therefore be it

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Legislature of the State of New York memorialize and respectfully petition the President and the Congress of the United States to enact during the present session such legislation as will provide an additional program of highway construction and improvement for 1934 of at least $500,000,000, to be allocated among the various States upon the same basis as was followed in connection with the apportionment made last year under the original $400,000,000 fund, the additional $500,000,000 fund to be administered under jurisdiction of the United States Bureau of Public Roads through the State highway departments of the various States; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the United States Senate, to the President of the United States, and to each Member of Congress elected from the State of New York.

By order of the senate.

MARGUERITE O'CONNELL, Clerk.

In assembly, April 4, 1934.
Concurred in without amendment.
By order of the assembly.

FRED W. HAMMOND, Clerk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the President of the United States and Congress that substantial reduction be made on taxes on tobacco and tobacco products

Whereas the Congress of the United States, through a subcommittee of its Committee on Ways and Means, has undertaken a full study of the status effect and the possible results of adjustments of the Federal tax rates on tobacco, snuff, and cigarettes and has just completed a series of hearings upon the subject, and is expected soon to have before it for consideration and action the report of said committee; and

Whereas the growing of tobacco of the types used in and marketed through these products is an important part of the agricultural activity of the State of South Carolina, with many of its citizens dependent upon that industry for a livelihood; and

Whereas an annual Federal tax burden of about $400,000 necessarily forces the prices of the manufactured products so high as to greatly restrict the consumption thereof, and thereby limit the demand for leaf tobacco and unduly restrict the prices that the farmer receives therefor; and

Whereas, among other expressions on these facts, the State grange, whose membership includes many farmers in the State, has through its executive committee adopted a resolution asking for a heavy tax reduction, and has had its views presented before the subcommittee hearing the matter in Washington: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of South Carolina does hereby memorialize the President of the United States and the Congress with this earnest request that such substantial reduction be made in the taxes on tobacco, snuff, and cigarettes as will encourage a greatly increased consumption of the product of the tobacco growers to the end that better prices and a heavier demand may prevail for leaf tobacco, and that the tobacco grower may, at least to a substantial extent, be relieved from the handicap under which he is placed through the fact that his product, along with all of the agricultural products of this country, is not only under a heavy direct tax burden but under that burden at rates which represent the emulation of a maximum prohibition era tax upon a maximum war-time tax; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent promptly to the President of the United States, the Vice President, the Speaker of the House, the Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in the House, and on Finance in the Senate, and to each of the Senators and Representatives of the States of South Carolina in the Congress.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Columbia, S.C., April 14, 1934.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution adopted by the house of representatives and concurred in by the senate.

[SEAL]

JAS. E. HUNTER, JR.,
Acting Clerk of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the board of aldermen of New York City, N.Y., favoring the prompt passage of the so-called "McLeod bill", providing for the payment of depositors in closed banks, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the city council of Chicago, Ill., favoring the passage of the so-called "McLeod bill", providing payment to depositors in closed banks, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

legislation providing for the registration of all aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Municipal Council of San Jacinto, Masbate, P.I., protesting against the imposition in the pending revenue bill of an excise tax of 5 cents per pound on coconut oil entering the United States from the Philippine Islands, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Board of Supervisors of the County of Kauai, Territory of Hawaii, favoring the passage of legislation according the same treatment to the sugar industry of Hawaii as that accorded to the sugar industry in continental United States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, protesting against the passage of the so-called "Jones-Costigan bill", relating to sugar, as being discriminatory against the Territory of Hawaii, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Du Page County Executive Committee, American Legion, of Illinois, favoring giving the same preference to war veterans in work or relief assignments under all new Public Works or relief programs as prevailed in the original C.W.A. program, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Eighth Ward Share-Our-Wealth Club, of New Orleans, La., favoring the passage of legislation sponsored by the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], providing for the redistribution of wealth and the granting of old-age pensions, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented resolutions adopted by Local Union No. 1224, of Emporia, and Local Union No. 168, of Kansas City, both of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, in the State of Kansas, favoring the passage of the so-called "Wagner-Lewis unemployment insurance bill", which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LEWIS (for Mr. TYDINGS) presented a petition of sundry citizens of Galesville, Md., praying for the passage of the so-called "McLeod bill", providing for the payment of depositors in closed banks, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. WALCOTT presented a memorial of 391 citizens, being employees of investment firms in and around Hartford, Conn., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "Fletcher-Rayburn bill", providing for the regulation of stock exchanges, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented petitions of the Hartford (Conn.) Federation of Churches and the Women's Missionary Society of the First Baptist Church of Middletown, in the State of Connecticut, favoring the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the National Circle, Daughters of Isabella, of New Haven; members of the congregation, the Holy Name Society, the Saint Anne Society, and the Sodality of the Children of Mary, all of the parish of Saint Anthony of Padua, and the Bridgeport Council of Catholic Men, of Bridgeport, all in the State of Connecticut favoring liberalizing amendment of Senate bill 2910, the so-called "communications bill", providing more adequate radio broadcasting time for religious, educational, cooperative, and similar non-profit-making associations, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WALSH presented a petition of sundry citizens of Melrose, Mass., praying for the passage of the so-called "Sweeney bill", being House bill 8758, to discontinue administrative furloughs in the Postal Service, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of citizens, being executives and members of the Farrington Manufacturing Co., of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the passage of the proposed national securities exchange bill of 1934, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the City Council of Revere, Mass., protesting against the erection in East Boston, Mass., of housing buildings known as "The Neptune Garden Apartments", which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the secretary-treasurer of Local No. 9, A. F. of M., of Boston, Mass., praying for the passage of the so-called "Wagner-Lewis bill", pertaining to unemployment insurance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Local Union No. 11, Masters, Mates, and Pilots of America, of Boston; Local Union No. 43, United Textile Workers of America, of Adams; Local Union No. 108, International Union of Operating Engineers, of Rockport; and Bricklayers' and Masons' Union No. 10, of Lawrence, all in the State of Massachusetts, favoring the passage of the so-called "Wagner-Lewis bill" pertaining to unemployment insurance, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARRISON presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House Concurrent Resolution 39

House concurrent resolution stressing the importance of and commending the work of the McNeill Experiment Station and memorializing the Congress of the United States to make suitable appropriation for its maintenance

Whereas agriculture is of primary importance to the people of Mississippi, furnishing livelihood to approximately 80 percent of our residents and thereby affecting all persons living within the State; and

Whereas the urgency of the times and the importance that our State resources be developed necessitates that experimental work be conducted to ascertain and prove the merits of new and better agricultural principles and practices; and

Whereas the McNeill Experiment Station has contributed notably to the fund of valuable agricultural information, particularly in respect to the localization of such information to the Coastal Plains area and specifically in the instance of practical methods of handling livestock and of reforestation of denuded long-leaf-pine land and of introducing and proving the practicability of native and foreign grasses and legumes; and

Whereas this information is of practical value, not only in Mississippi but also throughout the very considerable area included in the Coastal Plain area in several Southern States; and

Whereas the McNeill Experiment Station has been and continues to be inadequately financed because of inability to appropriate on the part of the Mississippi State government and lack of direct appropriation on the part of the Federal Government in Washington: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Mississippi (the senate concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States be, and the same hereby is, memorialized to provide adequate funds to the proper financial support of the McNeill Experiment Station, located at McNeill, Miss.;

Resolved further, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the United States Senators and Congressmen representing the State of Mississippi in Congress.

Adopted by the house of representatives March 9, 1934.

THOS. L. BAILEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Adopted by the senate March 26, 1934.

DENNIS MURPHREE,
President of the Senate.

Originated in house.

BUFORD GEIGER, Clerk.

Mr. HARRISON also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

House Concurrent Resolution 49

House concurrent resolution memorializing the United States, through its proper agencies, to maintain an inspector at Biloxi for the purpose of cooperating with persons engaged in the sea-food industry in meeting the requirements of the United States Government relative to the preparation, packing, and shipping such sea foods

Whereas one of the important industries of the State of Mississippi consists of its sea-food industry along the Mississippi coast, the product of which consists of hundreds of carloads of packed and canned shrimp, oysters, and other sea foods which are known and sold throughout the civilized world; and

Whereas this industry, so important to the welfare of the State and its people, furnishes employment to many thousands of persons and contributes in an indirect manner to the support and well-being of vast numbers of our people; and

Whereas, in order to further the development of this great industry and to aid and expedite those persons engaged therein in complying with all of the rules and regulations of the Federal Pure Food and Drug Administration: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Mississippi (the senate concurring therein), That the Legislature of the State of Mississippi do now go on record memorializing and requesting the United States Government, through its proper agencies, to maintain an inspector in the city of Biloxi, the center of such industry, authorized and empowered to cooperate with persons engaged in the sea-food industry and to make all inspections necessary and proper to be made by the Pure Food and Drug Administration of shrimp and other sea foods brought into the factories in their raw state, the processing thereof, to reinspect packed shrimp before the same be shipped, and to make such other inspections as may be necessary, and to advise with the persons engaged in said industry as to the proper method whereby strict compliance may be met with all of the Federal regulations; and that a copy of the foregoing resolution be forwarded to the United States Senators from Mississippi and our Congressmen.

Adopted by the house of representatives March 21, 1934.

THOS. L. BAILEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Adopted by the senate March 26, 1934.

DENNIS MURPHREE,
President of the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. LEWIS (for Mr. TYDINGS), from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 1757) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Mount Olivet Cemetery Co. in the District of Columbia", reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 731) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2044) to amend the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 732) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2207) for the relief of Sarah Lloyd, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 736) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 426) for the relief of Robert H. Wilder, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 735) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the bill (S. 3275) for the allowance of certain claims for extra labor above the legal day of 8 hours at the several navy yards and shore stations certified by the Court of Claims, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 737) thereon.

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 7) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to taxes on certain incomes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 738) thereon.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 2825) to provide for an appropriation of $50,000 with which to make a survey of the Old Indian Trail, known as the "Natchez Trace", with a view of constructing a national road on this route to be known as the "Natchez Trace Parkway", reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 740) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1779. An act authorizing the issuance of a special postage stamp in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the Colony of Connecticut (Rept. No. 741);

H.R. 3845. An act to amend section 198 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States", approved March 4, 1909, as amended by the acts of May 18, 1916, and July 28, 1916 (Rept. No. 742); and

H.R. 6676. An act to require postmasters to account for money collected on mail delivered at their respective offices (Rept. No. 743).

TOMBIGBEE RIVER BRIDGE NEAR NAHEOLA, ALA.

Mr. STEPHENS. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3296) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to Meridian & Bigbee River Railway Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Naheola, Ala.", approved January 15, 1927, and I submit a report (No. 734) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved January 15, 1927, granting the consent of Congress to the Meridian & Bigbee River Railway Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Naheola, Ala., be, and the same is hereby, revived and reenacted: Provided, That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of the bridge herein referred to be commenced within 2 years and completed within 4 years from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

INCLUSION OF SUGAR BEETS AND CANE AS BASIC COMMODITIES

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Finance, I report favorably, with amendments, the bill (H.R. 8861) to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, and I submit a report thereon (No. 733).

Mr. President, in connection with the report, I should announce that Senators from some 19 States have hope that the business pending before the Senate, by unanimous consent might be laid aside this afternoon in order that the bill I have just reported could be considered for passage. I am advised, however, that objection would be made to immediate consideration, because of the urgent pressure of other business, but that if the report shall go over, under the rule, until tomorrow, an opportunity will be afforded to press for immediate consideration of the report and the bill.

Indicating the public importance of the bill sent to the desk, I ask to have incorporated in the RECORD certain telegrams received by me with reference to the reported measure. Some 80,000 sugar-growing farmers, and many hundreds of thousands of other citizens of this country, directly or indirectly, are gravely affected by the postponement of approval by the Senate of the bill which has already passed the House of Representatives. I should like to have the telegrams read at the desk.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado will yield, I think I should supplement the remarks made by him by saying that this morning he appealed to me to permit the bill to come up for consideration today, as did the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. I realize the necessity of early consideration of the measure, but, in view of the rule that a report must lie over for a day after being submitted, I could not consent to its consideration today.

Again indicating my interest in an early consideration of the bill, I did say to the Senators involved that tomorrow I would not object to unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business and proceed to the consideration of the sugar bill.

I desire to make this statement, because I realize the urgency of the situation.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I was out of the Chamber when the Senator made his statement. Did he ask that the bill be taken up at once?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I expressed the wish of Representatives of many States that the bill be taken up at once, but indicated that because of objections which would be preferred to its consideration today, I advised the Senate that tomorrow an effort will be made to have it given first consideration.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, my reason for interposing at all was because of my desire to have the measure go over for a day, at least, until material which has been sent to me shall have arrived. I think perhaps there is considerable interest in the bill in my State.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Will 24 hours suffice?

Mr. COPELAND. I cannot answer at the moment. I want first to see what the material is.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope this measure may be expedited, because the Senate has been considering the subject for many months. The representatives of the sugar-beet regions have very largely gotten together, and if the legislation is to be enacted, as has been stated by the Senator from Colorado, it ought to be enacted quickly. I am hopeful that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], in charge of the air-mail bill, which will be taken up, I understand, after the morning hour shall expire, will on tomorrow consent to temporarily laying aside the air mail bill so that the sugar bill may be brought before the Senate and its passage expedited.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in answer to what the Senator from Mississippi has said, I hope that the air-mail bill may be taken up as soon as the morning business shall have been concluded. My understanding is that the sugar bill will take but a brief time, and I see no reason why, after the air-mail bill shall have been taken up, the then pending business should not be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the sugar bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I renew my request that the communications I have sent to the desk from responsible citizens and organizations be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the following communications:

LONGMONT, COLO., April 14, 1934.

Senator E. P. COSTIGAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.:

Growers' mass meetings northern Colorado unanimously appeal to Congress for immediate favorable consideration of Jones-Costigan bill. Desperate condition exists, planting season half over.

ALBERT DAKAN,
Secretary Beet Growers' Committee.

LONGMONT, COLO., April 14, 1934.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.:

Sugar situation is very critical. Deadlock on contract between company and growers' organization. Organization members developing unfriendly attitude toward nonmembers. Rumors of intimidation. Every day delayed legislation lessens prospect of settlement and cuts tonnage of prospective crop.

LONGMONT TIMES CALL.

LONGMONT, COLO., April 14, 1934.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D.C.:

Sincerely urge prompt action on Costigan-Jones bill. Farmers should be planting beets if returns are to be satisfactory. Further delay will tend to reduce tonnage and sugar content. Good beet crop means much to farmer, labor, and business. Experience has demonstrated poor crop worse than none.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK.
LONGMONT NATIONAL BANK.

DENVER, COLO., April 6, 1934.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
Senate Office Building:

Resolved that we urge the speedy passage of the pending sugar bill in the Senate as passed in the House, with such amendments, if any, that may improve the position of the growers; and further that we have confidence in the administration of this legislation by the Department of Agriculture and that the several associations will await passage of this bill before taking further steps in attempting to negotiate a conract for 1934.

COLORADO-NEBRASKA CORPORATIVE BEET GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.
MONTANA-WYOMING BEET GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.
WHEATLAND BEET GROWERS' ASSOCIATION, WYOMING.

GREELEY, COLO., March 27, 1934.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D.C.:

Appreciate telegram of 26th reciting efforts to expedite sugar legislation. No attempt yet made to negotiate beet contract with Great Western though planting season here. Holly Co. offering contract among Delta and Grand Junction growers containing provisions for making reduction in beet payments in event of tariff reduction or for company paying processing tax. One blanket provision stipulates company may modify or amend contract terms touched by national legislation or Government regulation, including restriction of output or sugar sales. Obviously amount of additional payments for past crop to our farmers depends upon Washington legislation. No one can estimate impending disaster awaiting beet farmer if sugar legislation fails or is delayed too long. Growers deeply appreciate your efforts to obtain purchasing-price guarantee per ton.

MOUNTAIN STATES BEET GROWERS MARKETING ASSOCIATION,
J. D. PANCAKE, Secretary.

ROCKYFORD, COLO., March 24, 1934.

The Honorable ED. P. COSTIGAN,
United States Senator, Washington, D.C.:

The Southern Colorado Beet Growers Association meeting at La Junta today respectfully urge you to hasten sugar legislation. Time for planting makes it imperative that we growers know our status for this year. Anything you can do to expedite matters will be greatly appreciated.

SOUTHERN COLORADO BEET GROWERS ASSOCIATION,
H. H. HAMPTON, Secretary.

GREELEY, COLO., March 23, 1934.

Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D.C.:

Replying to your telegram just received, will kindly say we have confidence that you and other Members of Colorado congressional delegation and other friends laboring for the best interests of the beet industry will secure best terms possible in pending sugar legislation to insure its early passage and we accept the results of all your efforts, feeling that you and your associates have welfare of individual beet farmer at heart.

MOUNTAIN STATES BEET GROWERS MARKETING ASSOCIATION,
A. L. LITEL, President.
J. D. PANCAKE, Secretary.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, in line with the request of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] for early action on the so-called "sugar bill", I send to the desk and ask to have read a telegram received by me from the president of the Idaho Beet Growers' Association, calling attention to the serious condition in Idaho, and the urgent demand for the early consideration of the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegram will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

BLACKFOOT, IDAHO, April 17, 1934.

Senator JAMES P. POPE,
Senate Building, Washington, D.C.:

Farmers here very anxious about sugar bill. We are afraid that President will veto it if Cuba is restricted too much. Do all you can to get bill passed as soon as possible; condition here serious if bill should fail; labor demanding heavy increase in wages.

IDAHO BEET GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,
BY GEO. T. COBBLEY, President.

INVESTIGATION OF AIR-MAIL AND OCEAN-MAIL CONTRACTS—PRINTING ADDITIONAL COPIES OF HEARINGS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on Printing I report a concurrent resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The concurrent resolution (S.Con.Res. 13) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act, approved March 1, 1907, the Special Committee on Air and Ocean Mail Contracts of the Senate be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed 1,500 additional copies of each, and all parts of the testimony taken before said special committee during the Seventy-third Congress in connection with its investigation of air-mail and ocean-mail contracts.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Arizona a question. As I understand, when these additional copies are printed they will be distributed without regard to any equalized division among Senators.

Mr. HAYDEN. All committee hearings are delivered to the committee.

Mr. DILL. I think the concurrent resolution ought to provide on its face that at least 10 copies of these hearings shall be distributed to each Senator, or placed to his credit, so that all Senators may have an opportunity to comply with the requests of their constituents. The first 2,000 copies have been distributed without any division whatsoever, and the demand is such that some of us may not be able to get any of these copies.

Mr. HAYDEN. I dare say the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] could arrange that very readily.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to state that I shall be very glad indeed to follow any division which is arranged. If it is desired that the entire additional number to be printed be divided among Senators according to a certain proportion, it would be a great relief to the committee, and I shall be very glad to abide by any suggestion that is made and agreed upon.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, my suggestion was that 10 be allotted to each Senator, which would leave over 500 for general distribution, and if this method of distributing a certain number to each Senator were followed, there could be no question but that each Senator would have opportunity of taking care of the requests of his constituents. I do not see any reason why the resolution should not carry an amendment to that effect in its language.

Mr. HAYDEN. The practice has been to make distribution of Senate documents in the manner suggested by the Senator from Washington, but where there are committee hearings, the committees generally have control of their distribution. The chairman of the committee in this instance having indicated that he would make that kind of a distribution, that is all that is necessary.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I offer as an amendment, that at the end of the resolution the period be changed to a colon and there be added the words, "Provided, That 10 copies shall be distributed to each Senator."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I suggest that if that is to be done, it would be a great relief to the committee, because of multitudinous requests made for copies of the hearings, and I do not desire to have the burden of determining as to the remainder. I should like to have fifty or a hundred copies left to the committee simply for use here in the Senate as they might be needed, but I should be very glad indeed if the resolution would provide that as to the remainder, they could be divided up among Senators for distribution to their constituents.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is a varying demand on the part of Senators for these hearings, and where we provide for a definite division in the manner suggested, the result is simply this, that a number of Senators who do not want them receive them, and many of those who do want them do not get enough, whereas if the matter is left in the hands of the committee, with the limit the Senator has suggested, the matter can be better taken care of. I am willing to accept the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act, approved March 1, 1907, the Special Committee on Air and Ocean Mail Contracts of the Senate be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed 1,500 additional copies of each and all parts of the testimony taken before said special committee during the Seventy-third Congress in connection with its investigation of air-mail and ocean-mail contracts: Provided, That 10 copies shall be distributed to each Senator.

On page 4, line 20, add a new paragraph reading as follows:

"SEC. 4. The tariff powers herein defined shall not be exercised in respect to any basic commodity under the Agricultural Adjustment Act and/or any commodity which is manufactured or produced under a code pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act."

MARY ALLEN YOUNG

Mr. McNARY submitted the following resolution (S.Res. 223), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Mary Allen Young, daughter of John Sims, late an employee of the Senate, a sum equal to one year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

MILES THOMAS BARRETT—VETO MESSAGE (S.DOC. NO. 171)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, Senate bill no. 1484, for the relief of Miles Thomas Barrett.

This bill (as indicated by S.Rept. No. 264 thereon) appears to be predicated on the assumption that Barrett received no compensation "for his service in the Army from May 3, 1918, to August 19, 1918." I am advised by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy that Barrett's service in the Army, following his enlistment therein while absent without leave from the Marine Corps, covered the period from May 7, 1918, to August 19, 1918, both dates inclusive. I am further advised that he has been paid for the grade which he actually held in the Army, which was that of private, from May 7, 1918, to July 31, 1918. In these circumstances approval of this bill would result in a duplicate payment for the period of May 7 to July 31, 1918.

The objection which I have raised to the approval of this bill would not apply, however, to a bill which would compensate Barrett for service rendered during any other period for which he has not been paid, and I am not unmindful of statements made in the report on the bill to the effect that Barrett's reenlistment in the Army was actuated by his ardent desire for active duty in France, to which he understood he would be sent at once when he reenlisted in the Marine Corps on August 27, 1917, for duration of the war.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 17, 1934.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

BONDS OF HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION—CONFERENCE REPORT (S.DOC. NO. 170)

Mr. BULKLEY submitted the following report, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2999) to guarantee the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"That (a) section 4 (c) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows:

"'(c) The Corporation is authorized to issue bonds in an aggregate amount not to exceed $2,000,000,000, which may be sold by the Corporation to obtain funds for carrying out the purposes of this section, or exchanged as hereinafter provided. Such bonds shall be in such forms and denominations, shall mature within such periods of not more than 18 years from the date of their issue, shall bear such rates of interest not exceeding 4 percent per annum, shall be subject to such terms and conditions, and shall be issued in such manner and sold at such prices, as may be prescribed by the Corporation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such bonds shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof, and such bonds shall be lawful investments, and may be accepted as security, for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer or officers thereof. In the event that the Corporation shall be unable to pay upon demand, when due, the principal of, or interest on, such bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holder the amount thereof which is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon to the extent of the amount so paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is authorized to purchase any bonds of the Corporation issued under this subsection which are guaranteed as to interest and principal, and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the Corporation's bonds hereunder. The Secretary of the Treasury may, at any time, sell any of the bonds of the Corporation acquired by him under this subsection. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of the bonds of the Corporation shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States. The bonds issued by the Corporation under this subsection shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States or any District, Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority. The Corporation, including its franchise, its capital, reserves, and surplus, and its loans and incomes, shall likewise be exempt from such taxation; except that any real property of the Corporation shall be subject to taxation to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed. No such bonds shall be issued in excess of the assets of the Corporation, including the assets to be obtained from the proceeds of such bonds, but a failure to comply with this provision shall not invalidate the bonds or the guaranty of the same. The Corporation shall have power to purchase in the open market at any time and at any price not to exceed par any of the bonds issued by it. Any such bonds so purchased may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be sold or resold at any time and at any price. For a period of 6 months after the date this subsection, as amended, takes effect, the Corporation is authorized to refund any of its bonds issued prior to such date or any bonds issued after such date in compliance with commitments of the Corporation outstanding on such date, upon application of the holders thereof, by exchanging therefor bonds of an equal face amount issued by the Corporation under this subsection as amended, and bearing interest at such rate as may be prescribed by the Corporation with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; but such rate shall not be less than that first fixed after this subsection, as amended, takes effect on bonds exchanged by the Corporation for home mortgages. For the purpose of such refunding the Corporation is further authorized to increase its total bond issue in an amount equal to the amount of the bonds so refunded. Nothing in this subsection, as amended, shall be construed to prevent the Corporation from issuing bonds in compliance with commitments of the Corporation on the date this subsection, as amended, takes effect.'

"(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) of this section (except with respect to refunding) shall not apply to any bonds heretofore issued by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation under such section 4 (c), or to any bonds hereafter issued in compliance with commitments of the Corporation outstanding on the date of enactment of this act.

"SEC. 2. Section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"'(l) No home mortgage or other obligation or lien shall be acquired by the Corporation under subsection (d), and no cash advance shall be made under subsection (f), unless the applicant was in involuntary default on June 13, 1933, with respect to the indebtedness on his real estate and is unable to carry or refund his present mortgage indebtedness: Provided, That the foregoing limitation shall not apply in any case in which it is specifically shown to the satisfaction of the Corporation that a default after such date was due to unemployment or to economic conditions or misfortune beyond the control of the applicant, or in any case in which the home mortgage or other obligation or lien is held by an institution which is in liquidation.

"'(m) In all cases where the Corporation is authorized to advance cash to provide for necessary maintenance and to make necessary repairs it is also authorized to advance cash or exchange bonds for the rehabilitation, modernization, rebuilding, and enlargement of the homes financed; and in all cases where the Corporation has acquired a home mortgage or other obligation or lien it is authorized to advance cash or exchange bonds to provide for the maintenance, repair, rehabilitation, modernization, rebuilding, and enlargement of the homes financed and to take an additional lien, mortgage, or conveyance to secure such additional advance or to take a new home mortgage for the whole indebtedness; but the total amount advanced shall in no case exceed the respective amounts or percentages of value of the real estate as elsewhere provided in this section. Not to exceed $200,000,000 of the proceeds derived from the sale of bonds of the Corporation shall be used in making cash advances to provide for necessary maintenance and necessary repairs and for the rehabilitation, modernization, rebuilding, and enlargement of real estate securing the home mortgages and other obligations and liens acquired by the Corporation under this section.'

"SEC. 3. The sixth sentence of section 4 (d) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows: 'The Corporation may at any time grant an extension of time to any home owner for the payment of any installment of principal or interest owed by him to the Corporation, if in the judgment of the Corporation, the circumstances of the home owner and the condition of the security justify such extension.'

"SEC. 4. Subsection (g) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(g) The Corporation is further authorized to exchange bonds and to advance cash to redeem or recover homes lost by the owners by foreclosure or forced sale by a trustee under a deed of trust or under power of attorney, or by voluntary surrender to the mortgagee subsequent to January 1, 1930, subject to the limitations provided in subsection (d) of this section.'

"SEC. 5. Section 5 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"'(j) In addition to the authority to subscribe for preferred shares in Federal savings-and-loan associations, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized on behalf of the United States to subscribe for any amount of full paid income shares in such associations, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe for such full paid income shares upon the request of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. Payment on such shares may be called from time to time by the association, subject to the approval of said Board and the Secretary of the Treasury, and such payments shall be made from the funds appropriated pursuant to subsection (g) of this section; but the amount paid in by the Secretary of the Treasury for shares under this subsection and such subsection (g), together shall at no time exceed 75 percent of the total investment in the shares of such association by the Secretary of the Treasury and other shareholders. Each such association shall issue receipts for such payments by the Secretary of the Treasury in such form as may be approved by said Board and such receipts shall be evidence of the interest of the United States in such full paid income shares to the extent of the amount so paid. No request for the repurchase of the full paid income shares purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be made for a period of 5 years from the date of such purchase, and thereafter requests by the Secretary of the Treasury for the repurchase of such shares by such associations shall be made at the discretion of the Board; but no such association shall be requested to repurchase any such shares in any one year in an amount in excess of 10 percent of the total amount invested in such shares by the Secretary of the Treasury. Such repurchases shall be made in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Board for such associations.

"'(k) When designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, any Federal savings-and-loan association or member of any Federal Home Loan Bank may be employed as fiscal agent of the Government under such regulations as may be prescribed by said Secretary and shall perform all such reasonable duties as fiscal agent of the Government as may be required of it. Any Federal savings-and-loan association or member of any Federal Home Loan Bank may act as agent for any other instrumentality of the United States when designated for that purpose by such instrumentality of the United States.'

"SEC. 6. Section 5 (i) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows:

"'(i) Any member of the Federal home-loan bank may convert itself into a Federal savings-and-loan association under this act upon a vote of 51 percent or more of the votes cast at a legal meeting called to consider such action; but such conversion shall be subject to such rules and regulations as the Board may prescribe, and thereafter the converted association shall be entitled to all the benefits of this section and shall be subject to examination and regulation to the same extent as other associations incorporated pursuant to this act.'

"SEC. 7. The first sentence of the eighth paragraph of section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is further amended by inserting before the semicolon, after the words 'Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act', a comma and the following: 'or by the deposit or pledge of bonds issued under the provisions of subsection (c) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended.'

"(b) Paragraph (b) of section 14 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is further amended by inserting after the words 'bonds of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation having maturities from date of purchase of not exceeding 6 months', a comma and the following: 'bonds issued under the provisions of subsection (c) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, and having maturities from date of purchase of not exceeding 6 months.'

"SEC. 8. The Federal Reserve banks are authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to act as depositaries, custodians, and fiscal agents for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

"SEC. 9. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation is authorized to buy bonds or debentures of Federal home-loan banks upon such terms as may be agreed upon or to loan money to Federal home-loan banks upon such terms as may be agreed upon, but not to exceed $50,000,000 shall be invested or advanced under this section.

"SEC. 10. The first sentence of section 10 (b) of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: 'unless the amount of the debt secured by such home mortgage is less than 50 percent of the value of the real estate with respect to which the home mortgage was given, as such real estate was appraised when the home mortgage was made.'

"SEC. 11. Section 6 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences: 'For the purposes of this section the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to allocate and make immediately available to the Board, out of the funds appropriated pursuant to section 5 (g), the sum of $500,000. Such sum shall be in addition to the funds appropriated pursuant to this section, and shall be subject to the call of the Board and shall remain available until expended.'

"SEC. 12. Subsection (e) of section 8 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(e) No person, partnership, association, or corporation shall, directly or indirectly, solicit, contract for, charge or receive, or attempt to solicit, contract for, charge or receive any fee, charge, or other consideration from any person applying to the Corporation for a loan, whether bond or cash except ordinary fees authorized and required by the Corporation for services actually rendered for examination and perfection of title, appraisal, and like necessary services. Any person, partnership, association, or corporation violating the provisions of this subsection shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years or both.'

"SEC. 13. Subsection (k) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is hereby amended by inserting a new sentence after the second sentence of such subsection as follows: 'All payments upon principal of loans made by the Corporation shall, under regulations made by the Corporation, be applied to the retirement of the bonds of the Corporation.'

"SEC. 14. The eighth sentence of section 4 (a) of the act entitled 'An act to provide for the establishment of a Corporation to aid in the refinancing of farm debts, and for other purposes', approved January 31, 1934, is amended to read as follows: 'No such bonds shall be issued in excess of the assets of the Corporation, including the assets to be obtained from the proceeds of such bonds, but a failure to comply with this provision shall not invalidate the bonds or the guaranty of the same.'

"SEC. 15. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby."

And the House agree to the same.

H.R. 8910. An act to establish a National Archives of the United States Government, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Library.

THE GREAT EFFUSION—EDITORIAL BY RAYMOND MOLEY

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial by Mr. Raymond Moley, in the magazine Today of the issue of April 14, 1934, entitled "The Great Effusion", having relation to a recent editorial appearing in the Saturday Evening Post.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Today of Apr. 14, 1934]

THE GREAT EFFUSION—A CONSIDERATION OF THE PRINCIPLES OF THE SATURDAY EVENING POST POLITICAL PARTY

The Saturday Evening Post has stepped from its role as the companion of idle hours and proposes a new political party. It publishes its confession of faith under the appropriate title The Great Illusion.

It is hard to answer this confession of faith, because it is not very logical. But by dint of piecing the sentences together and by establishing cogency, order, and logic where they do not really exist, I have reduced this boggling keynote speech to six points.

The Post says that in the old parties, containing as they do both conservatives and progressives, there should be realinement; some Republicans ought to get out of that party and some Democrats ought to rally around a "reformed and reconstructed Republican Party." The Post is 21 months late, which is not bad for the Post. Franklin D. Roosevelt, in accepting the Democratic nomination, said the same thing:

"This is no time for fear, for reaction, or for timidity, and here and now I invite those nominal Republicans who find that their conscience cannot be squared with the groping and the failure of their party leaders to join hands with us; here and now, in equal measure, I warn those nominal Democrats who squint at the future with their faces turned toward the past, and who feel no responsibility to the demands of the new time, that they are out of step with their party."

The Post's first complaint against the Roosevelt administration is that it is proposing a new measure "every morning" and is asking Congress to pass "prepared" bills. The answer to this is twofold. The administration in the spring of 1933 faced a major economic collapse, and energy was necessary to save the country. Would the Post have spent "months and years" preparing banking legislation in March 1933 when the savings of the people were engulfed in a complete collapse of the banking system?

As to the present session of Congress, what the Post says is completely false and misleading. The President in his annual message announced a practical suspension of legislative activity in this session. Only those measures were requested that were a necessary fulfillment of his pledges. They were the gold bill, the tariff bill, the stock exchange bill, the St. Lawrence Treaty, and the communications bill. The Post is disturbed by the fact that "most of the legislation that is being proposed bears the imprint of the 'brain trust'", those "smart, shallow young men who are so cocksure and so determined to make us all over in 5 or 10 minutes."

Let the facts speak.

The gold bill was largely the work of veteran lawyers of the Treasury. The tariff bill bears the imprint of that flaming and radical youth, Cordell Hull; the communications bill, that of Joseph B. Eastman, whom the railroads regard as the most competent and experienced public servant in his line in this generation. The St. Lawrence Treaty came over from the Hoover administration. The stock exchange bill—ah, that is another story. But it is the real point of the Saturday Evening Post's effusion, and we shall return to that presently.

The Post complains against the administration of certain measures already in operation, alleging that the defects are due to the "haste" with which they were conceived and the inexperience of those in charge. Let us take the Post's list and measure it.

The C.W.A.—the Post would have had it "carefully planned and slowly put into effect." It was carefully planned. The idea of the C.W.A. was discussed by President Roosevelt and Harry Hopkins as long ago as May 1932. It was put into effect when it was because hunger and suffering and moral and spiritual discouragement were paralyzing the country. But what does the Post know of hunger and suffering and discouragement?

Next is the N.R.A. One of the most vicious falsehoods current these days is the charge that this legislation was the work of theorists. No professor and, so far as I know, no man under 45 had anything whatsoever to do with the framing of the bill. The various ideas that went into it came from business men, leaders of the American Federation of Labor, and a group of Senators. A most important contribution to the measure was formulated in that hotbed of Bolshevism—the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. These are facts. I know them to be facts and I have the documentary evidence to sustain my assertions.

Perhaps the A.A.A. is the product of the so-called "intellectuals * * * who have never made a wheel turn over." The agricultural legislation of the President is the result of the work of many people. The principles which it embodies were set forth in his Topeka speech in 1932. They had been considered and passed upon by no fewer than 25 people. They were not, except in a few instances, young. Only two of them were professors. The others were business men and Members of Congress, who had for a generation participated in the battle over agricultural relief. Here again I make the flat assertion not only because I was an eyewitness to most of what was done but because the documentary proof is in my possession.

The assertions of the Post, then, apply neither to the C.W.A., the N.R.A., nor the A.A.A.

Ah, the truth comes out at the end. This entire tirade against the administration generally, the exhortation to form a new party, this denunciation of Roosevelt, youth, and progressivism—all this is but window dressing to cover up the real purpose of the guardian of reaction. It is the stock exchange bill that has put the Post so beside itself.

Here, again, I know the facts at first hand. The ideas of this legislation did not come from a preconceived theoretic system of Government control of business. They were drawn from American experience, found in scores of places. The idea of limiting margins and speculative credit is as old as the hills. The provisions to protect stockholders from exploitation by insiders came from a partner of a most conservative law firm in Wall Street, who has himself taken credit for being the foster father of the provision. (Name furnished on request.) The provision concerning adequate reports of corporations to their stockholders is something the New York Stock Exchange has been seeking for many years, although it had neither the courage nor the strength to put it through. The provisions concerning manipulative practices came from Mr. Pecora's Senate investigation.

The President did not cause a bill to be framed. He asked Congress, under his constitutional rights, for legislation. The responsible committees of Congress proceeded to the task of framing it. These committees were under the chairmanship of two of the oldest and most trusted Members of the two Houses—Senator FLETCHER and Congressman RAYBURN. Congressman RAYBURN and Senator FLETCHER indicated their objectives and purposes, and at least a dozen men—old and young, and certainly not inexperienced—drafted the legislation. They were professional bill draftsmen. They did not put their own ideas into the law.

The bill was revised over and over again. All interested parties were heard. There have been at least 10 drafts of the measure. The bill was gone over word by word by Treasury and Federal Reserve experts, including Governor Black, who as yet has been suspected of no Moscow affiliations. Important sections were gone over and accepted by the Wall Street counsels actually appearing for complaining brokers, dealers, and bankers. The final result is as far from being the work of young and inexperienced men as the Constitution of the United States was the work of Randolph, who submitted the first draft.

It cannot, then, be the young men "untainted with any practical experience" who are really the concern of the Saturday Evening Post or Dr. Wirt or other propagandists in the cause of Wall Street's fight. It is the fact that the bill is effective and proposes to remedy evils that should be remedied and that the people of the United States want remedied. This is the reason for the Post's hysteria. Its colossal screed is not the constitution of a new party but a piece of special pleading for those who have always been the special concern of this organ of reaction.

There is something intensely hypocritical in the use these days of expressions such as "traditional liberties" and "the spirit of the pioneer." The Post has sprinkled these unctuous platitudes throughout. I find myself torn between an impulse to laugh and an impulse to swear when I hear, in luxurious clubs, talk about pioneer spirit in America. It is the talk of men whose sole contribution to pioneering has been limited to the initiation of stock-market pools, whose contribution to the economic building of the country has been that of an uninformed and inactive membership on boards of directors, whose lives have been spent safely behind the barricades of wealth.

I want liberty, too—freedom from the awful consequences of an economic system smashed by an orgy of speculation in a stock exchange made in the image of gamblers.

I want freedom—for workingmen to join unions of their own choice.

I want rights, too—the right of children to their youth.

I want security, for the savings of the people.

I want fairness in economic return—the right of the farmer to get a decent price for his products.

I am not for liberty for irresponsible bankers who foist fake securities upon the public.

The true conservative leader in this country is the President of the United States. To be a conservative is to conserve—to save human values, to promote as rapidly as can be a return of active economic relationships.

If Franklin D. Roosevelt were a radical, he certainly would not have followed the course that he did. Any high-school student who has read the lessons of history knows that the way to achieve a revolution is to let things get so bad that an enraged and infuriated public takes things into its own hands. The radical way in the spring of 1933 would have been for Mr. Roosevelt to delay until the multitude of the unemployed should rattle the economic structure down around the ears of its leaders, and then, on the ruins, to make himself the leader of the victorious masses.

Instead of this, he chose the conservative way—the immediate restoration of a capitalistic society. If the Post will read its contemporary, the New Masses, it will see what real radicals think of the course that Mr. Roosevelt has taken. They look upon him as their enemy. Their friend is the Post, with the reactionary obscurantism preached by it week after week, even in the fiction that it purveys.

I am a conservative. I want to save what we have. The Post, apparently, in its blindness, like the Bourbons, never learns and never forgets.

RAYMOND MOLEY.

AMERICA'S TRADE POLICY—ADDRESS BY GEORGE N. PEEK

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD a very able address delivered by Mr. George N. Peek, special adviser to the President on foreign trade. The address is one of a series on America's Choice of a Trade Policy, and was delivered April 5 and broadcast over the National Broadcasting Co. system.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICA'S CHOICE OF A TRADE POLICY

The more we experience this depression the more fully we understand that it was not the development of a few weeks or even of a few months. Rather, it was the uneconomic practices of years, not merely in our foreign trade but in our domestic trade as well, that laid the foundation for our present difficulties. We shall not get out of them easily. With courage and resolution we shall have to take careful steps toward restoration. Our President is giving us leadership. In the future, as we look back on the stirring times we are living through today, we shall acknowledge, I think, more fully than now the country's debt to that leadership.

Particularly at this time the condition calls for coordination in all effort directed by the Government toward recovery in our foreign trade. I believe a sound foreign commerce is essential to the recovery and the continued well-being of this country. Above all, in agriculture we cannot do without it. For 22 years, between 1910 and 1932, 18 percent of our agricultural income came from exports. We built our agricultural economy on the prospect of the continuance of this international business. We look with alarm on the fact that at the end of last year the volume of exports of our 44 principal farm products was the smallest in 17 years. It is not possible to readjust ourselves to this enormous difference solely by restricting our production. The social dislocation would be too great. Recovery by restriction runs against the grain of the American people. In an emergency, yes; for continuance, no; not while American stock rules America. In addition to the restrictions we are obliged for the time being to impose on production, we must squarely face those conditions which have hampered and reduced our exports. We must seek outlets and more outlets at home and abroad.

The cold figures show us that our exports, in value, were but 25 percent in 1933 of our exports in 1929. Other nations have also suffered heavy losses, but none of the larger nations has experienced a loss so great as ours. Our British cousins, from whom almost 20 years ago we wrested the supremacy of world trade in exports, last year for the first time since the war had a greater export trade than ours. Translating both figures into the current value of the dollar, British exports, including reexports, amounted to about $1,768,000,000, compared with our own total exports of about $1,675,000,000. Reducing both figures to terms of gold, the disparity is about the same, Britain's total exports amounting to $1,380,000,000, compared with ours of $1,289,000,000. Either way you look at it, our boasted world supremacy in export trade was transferred last year to London. In 1933 we did only 11½ percent of the world's export trade, compared with our share in 1929 of about 15½ percent. Those are disquieting facts when it is remembered that, counting the farmers growing the crops which have hitherto been exported, more than two and one-half million families of this country depend upon foreign trade for their livelihood.

The administration considers this situation a serious one, and the President has called in consultation all the departments and agencies of our Government concerned with foreign trade, with a view to devising and carrying into effect a coordinated international trade policy. Last December it was my privilege to be appointed by the President chairman of a temporary committee to recommend permanent machinery to coordinate all our Government relations to foreign trade. I realize that there are many people in this country, particularly my distinguished friend of many years, the Secretary of State, whose knowledge of our foreign trade and its needs far exceeds my own; but the development of a coordinated and implemented Government clearing house for foreign-trade matters I have for years believed possible. I have believed we should have better teamwork on this question. The necessity for this teamwork in Washington on our foreign commercial policy has been realized slowly. We are still at its very early stages. I strongly believe that permanently constructive results, both to the agricultural and industrial communities, are going to come from this new activity. I believe just as strongly that we cannot build this thing in a day; nor can we, nor should we, do for American producers and traders anything which they could do better for themselves.

Under the order issued by the President on March 23 last I was authorized as special adviser on foreign trade to obtain, review, and coordinate the information, statistics, and data with reference to the foreign trade of the United States, collected by or prepared by any department or other establishment or agency of the Federal Government or elsewhere.

That is the first and most important part of our duties. We shall try to portray an absolutely frank picture of the actual situation and we shall look at it without rose-tinted glasses. Serious mistakes have been made during the past 15 years, and we have never fully realized either how we happened to make those mistakes or how other countries added to the uneconomic situation we helped to create. The administration in power during the 12 years immediately following the war will never be able to dissociate themselves from the series of events which followed fatefully and necessarily, one upon another, until the amazing speculative period terminating in the late summer of 1929 brought down the whole house of cards and revealed the unstable material of which that prosperity was built.

We cannot formulate our foreign-trade recovery upon the principles which now we see led us inevitably to this disaster. Just as the domestic policy of this country is being refounded, so must the foreign commercial policy of our country be adjusted in order to avoid, as much as is humanly possible, a repetition of the gigantic toll in human displacement and human suffering which has occurred since 1920 in agriculture and since 1929 in industry.

The second part of our endeavor will be, in following the terms of our Executive order, "to carry on negotiations with respect to specific trade transactions with any individual, corporation, association, group, or business agency interested in obtaining assistance from the Federal Government through financial transactions, barter transactions, or other forms of Government participation authorized by law."

If we have learned anything from experience, it is that eventually our exports and our imports approximately must balance. Trading cannot be a one-sided transaction. I have found that wherever we strip this idea of its economic language and academic sound and tell plain farmers and plain business men in plain English that we are going to help resume world business on the basis of bartering or swapping, we get immediate and intelligent approval of the idea. I would not go so far as to say that Uncle Sam never won a conference or lost a trade. I think that Secretary of State Cordell Hull decidedly came off with the honors from the Montevideo conference. But, roughly speaking, it suits the temper of our people better to trade them to parley. Furthermore, in a trade it is very much more obvious to our own people that you have to buy something from the foreigner as well as sell him something if you are to be paid at all. The past administration believed that we could go on selling foreigners forever, piling up their debts against us in the light of our refusal to face the reality that an international balance, visible or invisible, must ultimately be squared.

I believe that no man denies today that we are in a position where our huge surpluses of agricultural products demand a world market. That requirement is imperative; the failure to carry it out has undermined our home price structure and has perpetuated the depression. Very well then, just as urgently we can accept in return selected goods or services which constitute surpluses abroad and whose removal will increase prices there; so that the joint process not only will raise prices here but will, by raising prices abroad, increase the opportunity to purchase our products. I believe that along with the method of endeavoring to enter into general agreements or treaties to reduce trade barriers where we can do so to our advantage, we can concentrate on specific trades in commodities where the prospect of a profit by traders on both sides will materially help in binding the bargain. That is what I call cutting holes through the tariff wall.

Where we can make bargains that will help dissolve our surpluses, and promote the sound business interest of our people as a whole, we shall have an impelling force behind these specific transactions. They will not threaten in any sense the just security of our general tariff structure but will make it possible and highly desirable to give preference to national welfare rather than to special privilege.

After all it is not entirely the tariff which has been to blame. There are many barriers to trade in the form of embargoes, quotas, unfair practices of one kind and another, exchange restrictions, currency devaluations or fluctuations, and outright currency manipulations, which are just as obstructive to trade as some of the prohibitive tariff schedules. We desire to deal with the whole subject in a sensible way. We want to bring the facts together in a common picture. That picture will give to you and to us an honest and comprehensive balance sheet of the real interests of the United States. Every department of the Government having a concern in our foreign trade will collaborate in it.

I have spoken of the phases of our work which I believe must come first. It will take time to survey accurately the resources of foreign-trade data which exist in Washington. It will take time to consider all the proposals being presented to us in the light of these data. Then, and only after we get our picture comes the third phase of our operation—that of facilitating the extension of credit. I have already said that the new export-import banks have not been created for the purpose of acting as Santa Claus, to hand out presents at home or abroad. The banks have been created for the purpose of assisting our foreign trade and of providing facilities for our people not now obtainable in regular banking channels. They are intended primarily to finance the seller in this country. Their essential purpose is to facilitate trade that would not be possible without them. Again, I urge industry in its own interest to be temperate in its demands at the start of the new agencies, but I invite its fullest cooperation to bring these new banking facilities into practical service.

There need be no confusion about the fact that as a preliminary step in setting up these banks we have first organized export-import banks for Russia and for Cuba. It will readily be understood that special circumstances are concerned in both.

Please remember that these banks, or financing institutions—for that is more nearly what they are—come in as the third link of our chain. Frankly, I am not disposed to speak technically as yet on either our principles or our policies. Certainly we are not going to increase the frozen debts owed to this country. I am sure I am expressing the sense of the producers and manufacturers, who for many months past have urged this additional credit agency, that the first purpose of its accommodations should be to help sellers in this country to move their goods. I believe it is a sound rule of business that the sale of goods and the provision for payment should be included in one transaction. The export-import banks, I believe, can be effective instruments in breaking the log jam of credit, in which the limitations of the banking system, both abroad and at home, have piled up both good business and bad in a tangle of disaster.

We expect to supplement and not to replace the functions of existing banks, and we anticipate and have already experienced their constructive cooperation. We shall be asked particularly for intermediate credit, I anticipate, from the many conferences I have had already; I think in most cases terms of a few months will meet the most pressing need and will release a very substantial amount of additional trade. Capital goods in some instances will require longer terms, and on consumable goods the terms should naturally be shorter. But in all cases our procedure should be guided by the credit of the buyer and the seller, by the nature of the transaction, and by its importance, not only to present but to future business for American producers and traders.

Naturally, different exporters need different kinds of accommodation, and a reasonably flexible system will have to be evolved to meet these varied seeds. It goes without saying, however, that a responsible Government institution must provide for the retention of the money in the United States. It is not the purpose of this agency to lend money to foreigners but to help American institutions extend credit to foreign buyers on terms which will compete with other nations, and which accord with the necessities of present-day conditions in our own country.

I have been asked about the Government assuming the credit risks. Personally I do not see why, when manufacturers receive orders from abroad, they should not themselves assume a large part of the risk in filling these orders unless they are willing to forego a large part of their profit. It seems to me only just that those who stand to make the profits out of such business should take their full part in the credit risk. If credit insurance is desired, I shall be glad to help work out a plan which is fair and equitable.

Other nations are developing their trade plans more rapidly than we are. Already this year three nations have armed their executives with powers to make reciprocal commercial agreements and almost all nations possess powers of coordinated action much more modern and flexible than our own. I anticipate that in some form satisfactory to the President, our own Chief Executive will also soon possess greater freedom of action. In a rapidly changing world this is a necessary and entirely common-sense step.

America is not going out of world business. We are not going to withdraw those of our products we are best qualified to supply from circulation in the markets of the world. Generally speaking, in the immediate past, we have been treated somewhat roughly in certain foreign countries. Other nations of the world have made more than 60 agreements among themselves within the past few years which have had one striking similarity—they have left our interests out of the picture, except where they have definitely and intentionally affected them adversely. I am not one of those who believe that in order to resume our place in international business we have to do anything remotely threatening the disruption of peaceful relations. On the contrary, I believe we shall be much more likely to get into trouble if we continue in our position of international Simple Simon and allow curselves to be pushed about just because we have possessed no coordinated policy of maintaining our proper position.

We are sitting by watching other nations play for a very large stake, and a substantial part of that stake is our own. Certainly we cannot gain anything by isolating ourselves completely. By so doing we shall only impoverish ourselves. There is no use in claiming a monopoly over our impoverished home market, brought upon us by our inflexible trade policy during recent years. There are other markets, and we have goods to supply them. Moreover, no one need be apprehensive that increased imports, taken in return for our selected and increased exports, will exert any more serious danger to our economic situation than any other of the elements of a profitable foreign trade. Our imports are only one quarter as large in their gold value as they were in 1929. Normally they have a long way to come back before they even strike an equipoise in our properly regulated economic life.

We cannot sell unless we buy; but we can both sell and buy intelligently, and with some coordinated knowledge of what we are doing. We can and should watch the flow of long- and short-term loans, of tourist credits, of currency, and of shipping and insurance charges and other such invisibles just as closely as we watch from month to month our merchandise trade. Without such knowledge we have no real understanding of what goes on between nations. We had much of this knowledge before 1929, but it was scattered in unrelated departments throughout Washington. If we had put it together on a balance sheet and frankly faced what the in and out items showed us, we should have been spared a lot of our trouble.

We should have foreseen the blocked exchange situation, for example, which I believe has exerted quite as much harm to our trade and to that of the rest of the world as all of the protective and prohibitive tariffs. For under blocked exchange you have all the fun of selling your goods and do not wake up to the fact that you have not been paid until a large amount of your money has been impounded in a foreign country. Then, when your creditors talk terms, they talk long terms, and you can only put on long faces and take it. It is not the fault of the many good and able men and women in the various departments that we find ourselves in the position we are in. Responsibility rests with previous administrations which failed to act.

The manufacturers and producers of the country have asked for an agency here in Washington to coordinate and supplement with real assistance the foreign-trade resources of our Government. I believe this job can be done, and if, as I earnestly hope, it can be effectively done, it will be as great a service as any I know in subduing our ancient enemy, the depression. May his shadow grow thinner! And may the thin purse of every honest man grow thicker!

LAWYERS IN THE SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by John Brown Mason in the Rocky Mountain Law Review, of the February 1934 issue, the title of which is "A Study of the Legal Education and Training of the Lawyers in the Seventy-third Congress."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A STUDY OF THE LEGAL EDUCATION AND TRAINING OF THE LAWYERS IN THE SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS

"Lawyers do not live by bread alone. * * * The community pays them in terms of prestige, power, and fame." [1]—James Grafton Rogers.

Comments are not infrequent on the predominance of men of legal training and experience in our legislative councils, State and Federal. Since the very beginning of the independence of the United States the lawyer has held an eminent place in our public life. A majority of the members of the Constitutional Convention of 1787 were lawyers by profession [2] and similar statement probably may be made concerning most, if not all, consequent State legislatures and both Houses of Congress. Needless to point out, in addition, that about two thirds of our Presidents have been lawyers.

The present study aims to furnish some figures, as exact as possible with the material available, and both absolute as well as on a percentage basis, concerning the legal education and legal experience of lawyer Members of the Seventy-third Congress, both Senate and House. The information presented has been gathered from biographical data contained in the Congressional Directory [3] and Who's Who in America.[4] Several interesting and some unexpected results were arrived at. It is possible at this time to draw only some conclusions. Others will have to await the compilation of statistical data for previous Congresses so that from comparisons the existence of definite tendencies over long period of time and indications of likely future developments may be brought out.

Both in the Senate and in the House of the present Congress lawyers are relatively more numerous in the Democratic than in the Republican Party, or in either House as a whole. This is especially true of the Senate.

Senate

	Number of Senators	Number of lawyers	Percentage of lawyers
Democrats	60	51	85
Republicans	[1] 36	17	47
Total	96	68	70

[1] Including 1 Farmer-Laborite.

House

	Number of Representatives	Number of lawyers	Percentage of lawyers
Democrats	310	191	62
Republicans	[1] 122	62	51
Total	[2] 432	251	58

[1] Including 5 Farmer-Laborites.
[2] There were 3 vacancies in the House.

In speaking of the educational background of the lawyer, Dean James Grafton Rogers has said: "The typical [lawyer] * * * seems to have about 1 year of slim college work and 2 years of reasonably good law-school experience. * * * It is true that our most successful lawyers in America will show a high average of college attendance. * * * Typical lists [of high-grade lawyers] on examination reveal that nearly 90 percent of the men included were college graduates before they began the study of law." [5]

The statistics of the Seventy-third Congress in this respect are interesting.

Taking the above quotation as a correct description of the education of the typical as well as the high-grade American lawyer, it appears that the average Congressman differs considerably from both of them. His general college as well as his law school training is much better than that of his typical colleague outside of Congress. The lawyer-Congressman does not, however, quite reach the mark set by the high-grade lawyer, as far as college education is concerned. This does not detract from the well-known fact that both Houses contain some of the keenest legal minds of the country.

Some significant differences are noticeable in the education of lawyer-Members of the Senate and of the House. Roughly, one half of the lawyer-Senators and only about one third of the lawyer-Representatives are graduates of some college, with an A.B. or similar nonprofessional bachelor degree. The House is to a considerable extent ahead of the Senate, however, in the extent and degree of law-school training. Of its lawyer-Members 57 percent are holders of the LL.B. degree, against only 33 percent of the Senate. The percentage of the research degree LL.M. is about the same for both Houses, with a small relative preponderance in favor of the Senate. The House has the distinction of having three Members with a J.S.D. degree, of whom one is a woman from Kansas, Mrs. KATHRYN O'LOUGHLIN MCCARTHY. All three were elected to Congress for the first time in 1932, and all three are Democrats. They come not from the East but from Kansas, California, and Utah, respectively.

A consideration of the law schools attended by the lawyers in Congress presents some unexpected and interesting facts.

	Democrat	Republican
Number of Senators with LL.B. degree from—
University of Michigan	3	----
University of Alabama	3	----
Cumberland University	2	----
Iowa University	----	2
New York University	1	----
Number of Representatives with LL.B. degree from—
University of Michigan	8	1
New York University	2	6
Harvard	5	2
Cumberland University	6	1
University of Alabama	5	----
University of Mississippi	5	----
Georgetown	4	1
Mercer University	5	----

This list includes those law schools only which are represented in the present Congress by five or more graduates, not counting students who attended without graduating. The University of Michigan heads the list for both Houses, to be equaled for the Senate by the University of Alabama, with Cumberland and Iowa sharing the second place, and New York University coming third. In the House, New York University takes second place, while Harvard and Cumberland tie for third honors. Columbia trails four other schools—Georgetown, Alabama, Mississippi, and Mercer.

Yale has awarded an LL.M. degree to one present Senator, and George Washington and Texas to one Representative each. Two Members of the House hold a J.S.D. degree from Chicago and one from Southern California. All of them are Democrats.

Nine Representatives have attended foreign universities; among them are 4 lawyers (3 Democrats and 1 Republican) who have studied at Heidelberg, Munich, Vienna, and Claremont (France). One Republican, in addition, studied law at the Inns of Court in London.

It is an interesting fact that out of 39 one-time public-school teachers now Members of the House, 24 have turned from teaching to law. Some of them indicate that they read law while teaching, at times through correspondence courses. One lawyer-Congressman began teaching at the age of 16. Another reports that he received a first-grade county teacher's certificate at 14; that he taught in writing schools during the winter in order to earn money to go to college. At 17 he graduated from a college, at 19 he became city superintendent of schools on competitive examination. He read a University of Virginia law course while teaching in another State. One Representative taught only 6 months, but the average time spent in teaching by those who mention its extent was 4 years, as against 5.8 years for those teacher-Congressmen who did not take up law. Senator NORRIS worked on farms in the summer and attended district school in the winter; he, too, taught school in order to earn the means for higher education and studied law while teaching. He even taught for 1 year after being admitted to the bar in order to get money to purchase a law library. Senator GORE, of Oklahoma, taught school before becoming a lawyer, though he is blind.

There are a number of professors of law and deans of law schools in Congress. The present Senate counts 2 of them, both Republicans, and the House 6, 5 of whom are Democrats. Senator FESS, Ohio, has been not only a college president (Antioch) but also a law-school dean (Ohio Northern University). His colleague and fellow partisan from Oregon, Senator MCNARY, was dean of the Willamette College of Law. Among Representatives we find former deans of the law schools of the University of Alabama and of Richmond College; a professor of law at the Mercer Beasley School of Law at Newark, N.J.; and lecturers at the East Texas and St. Louis University law schools.

A number of lawyer-Congressmen are authors, some of note. They include Representative BECK, Republican, of Pennsylvania, a graduate, incidentally, of a small college and of no law school, and well known for his works on constitutional law and government; Representative LUCE, Republican, of Massachusetts, who has written extensively on aspects of legislative work; Representative WHITLEY, Republican, from New York; and Mr. CANNON, Democrat, from Missouri, expert on parliamentary law. Senator FESS has written in the fields of American history and American political theory. Other lawyer-Congressmen are the authors of a Life of John Marshall, Secretary of State, The Foreign Trade of the United States (used as a college textbook), and other works.

Most lawyer-Congressmen appear to have practiced law as well as studied it. One or two state that they have not, while Senator LONG (Louisiana) makes it a point that he practiced law almost continually while holding public office. One Representative claims that he is "known in the State as a trial lawyer and a platform lecturer upon economic, literary, and historical subjects", while at the same time he is also profoundly interested in agriculture. A former municipal judge admits that he is "known as orator and singer." Other lawyer-Congressmen are less diversified in their nonlegal talents. Their legal experience, however, is most varied. One has been general counsel for a State league of municipalities, another judge advocate in the Army. One has practiced law in Mexico, one in China; another has been United States Assistant Attorney General and Solicitor General; member of the commission which revised the municipal act of New York. A Cherokee Indian by blood was attorney general for the Cherokee Nation and represented it in winding up its tribal affairs before the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes. One Congressman has been presiding judge of a State court of claims. Two were parliamentarians of the House before they became its Members.

This diversification of experience in public and legal life can best be illustrated by a tabulation:

	Members of the House	Members of the Senate
City attorney	32	10
County attorney	15	7
City prosecuting attorney	8	----
County prosecuting attorney	38	4
District attorney	51	14
Clerk of a court	10	1
City judge	8	1
County judge	9	2
District judge	----	3
United States district attorney	3	4
Assistant attorney general	5	1
Attorney General	1	1
Judge State supreme court	----	8

Two factors stand out most prominently in this chart: The number of city, county prosecuting, and district attorneys who have entered the House (97) and the Senate (18) and the number of State supreme courts judges who have become United States Senators (8), including 2 chief justices. The impression among students of politics that a vigorous prosecuting attorney has an opportunity at an early age to get his name before the public is therefore substantiated. If he has any political ambitions at all, he is subject to strong temptations to play up to the newspaper reader and voter. Of the eight State supreme court justices who became Senators, three expressly state that they resigned to become candidates for the Senate.

Lawyer-Congressmen enumerate achievements of additional distinctions, some real and some less apparent in the eyes of the observer. Among them are two Senators who are blind. One, Senator SCHALL, of Minnesota, continued his law practice after losing his eyesight; the other, Senator GORE, of Oklahoma, has been blind since the age of 11.

The lawyers in both Houses of Congress and both major parties seem to present a fairly accurate picture of a cross-section of our population. Their biographical data show their achievements and sometimes vanities—often by omission of fact as well as by their enumeration. They all belong to one and the same profession, but they are not a homogeneous group by any means. There are poor and well-to-do, successful lawyers in Congress; counsels for the underdog and for the powerful corporation. Many have known the hardships of poverty, while others have clearly led sheltered lives. Some were immigrant boys, ignorant of the language and customs of their new home, others graduated from fashionable preparatory schools. Among them are machine politicians and servants of vested interests, as well as militant fighters of predatory privilege. Perhaps they constitute, after all, a rather true representation of the American voter and his economic views, rather than a professional clique. The present writer is not prepared, on the basis of this study, to venture a definite opinion. It is obvious, however, that in spite of many attacks on the lawyer in politics he has continued to play his eminent role—a sign, apparently, that there is a demand which he fills.

"FLOUNDERING POLICIES NEED PRESIDENT'S HELP"—ARTICLE BY WILLIAM HARD

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by William Hard, appearing in the Washington Star of Sunday, April 15, 1934, entitled "Floundering Policies Need President's Help."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FLOUNDERING POLICIES NEED PRESIDENT'S HELP—FAILURE TO PROVIDE JOBS AND CONFUSION OVER PRICE LEVEL TARGETS FOR OPPONENTS OF ROOSEVELT PROGRAM

By William Hard

Anybody in Washington can feel the "new deal" pausing, can feel it circling, can feel it behaving like a retriever that fears it has lost the scent and is gallantly striving to recover it. Never was the indubitable genius of Franklin Delano Roosevelt as a political hunter more needed. Welcome back!

The central trouble is the still enormous mass of the unemployed. It is idle to talk of the accomplishment of recovery when eight or ten million workers are still not working.

It is true that industrial corporations are again beginning to make money. But if the N.R.A. codes are so constructed that capital can reap profits out of restricted production and restricted consumption with millions and millions of citizens left unemployed outside the industrial organism, then the N.R.A. has helped actually to accentuate a social problem which still requires the application to it of Rooseveltian social justice. No one can doubt that the ideal of Mr. Roosevelt—and the ideal of common sense—is that a profitable life for capital in this country shall develop only in accompaniment with a profitable life for the American people in total.

From the beginning it has been the aspiration of the new deal to arrive at that end. It has followed at least four different sorts of devices. Commentators customarily have divided new-deal policies into those designed for "recovery" and those designed for "reconstruction." The line thus drawn is dubious. "Recovery" and "reconstruction" merge. It is more convenient—and even more logical—to divide the new-deal policies into categories not of purpose but of method.

MOMENTUM SLACKENS

It will be found upon examination that each of the methods so far pursued has come now to a slackening of momentum, or even sometimes almost to a stoppage.

The first method was the monetary method. By manipulation of the gold value of money the price level was to be restored to the heights of 1926 and kept there.

This objective, every friend and every foe must admit, is far indeed from having been reached. Prices have not gone more than approximately half way back to the desired altitude. That altitude was declared to be necessary to economic regeneration. We today are not at that altitude, nor are we at that regeneration. Strict logic would thereupon suggest that further monetary manipulation was necessary.

But right there the administration recoils from its own road. For months it has taken no additional step in the monetary method of producing price reflation. Now, therefore, come the silver people in the Congress and declare that what has not been successfully concluded by the manipulation of one of the monetary metals should be valiantly attempted by the manipulation of the other.

EXPERIMENTS RESISTED

How can monetary experimenters and price reflationists meet that argument? In basic theory they cannot meet it at all. The monetary conservatives, who resisted the experimentations with gold, are on strong ground in resisting the experimentations with silver. The administration, however, which has committed itself over and over again to the predepression price level, is obviously embarrassed and perplexed. Itself reflationist, it has difficulty in answering and countering the congressional continued reflationists.

Its situation is thereupon—for the first time in this matter—negative. It has ceased to assault the citadel of 1926 by new rushes along the path of gold, and it declines to begin to assault it by new rushes along the path of silver. It has lost the reflationist flag to Senator WHEELER. Mr. WHEELER now summons the Congress to a fresh effort to arrive at the administration's own stated price terminal, and the administration is forced into saying:

"Rather than go there by silver we will not go there at all."

This may be perfectly sound, but it transfers the initiative in the price problem from the White House to Capitol Hill. It demonstrates that the monetary method of the new deal is thought by the "new dealers" in the executive branch of the Government to have come—for the moment at any rate—to its limit.

PUBLIC EXPENDITURES

The same observation must be made regarding its second method—its public-expenditures method. A strong streak of the philosophy of the new deal was to the effect that a sufficient quantity of public expenditures—through, for instance, the P.W.A.—would prime the pump of private industry and restore it to full normal flow. This idea is in operation now only hesitantly and falteringly.

If the P.W.A. and other similar constructional governmental agencies spend one and a half billion dollars during 1934, they will be fulfilling all present realistic expectations. The normal national income of the people of the United States is some $90,000,000,000 annually. Our national constructional opportunities in the immediate future—in the modernization of our railroads, in the replacement of obsolescent machinery in our factories, in the reconstruction and improvement of our residential housing in town and on countryside, in the relocation of industries, in the development of subsistence homesteads plus adjacent industrial employment, and in numerous other directions—come to $50,000,000,000 or $60,000,000,000 at a most moderate estimate. The instant future of this country, irrespective of what defeatists may say, is colossal.

But what contribution to the priming of it is a billion dollars or a billion and a half or two billion? It is like trying to prime the Mississippi with a freshet from a creek.

The administration thereupon loses its public-expenditures verve. It declines to support the bill of Representative KELLY of Pennsylvania for moving upon all our public constructional necessities and for arriving at universal reemployment through public corporations founded upon public credit. Just as it resigns to Senator WHEELER the hoisting of prices on monetary jacks, so it resigns to Representative KELLY the restoring of the flow of employment by public constructional pumps. Its public-expenditures method joins its monetary method in stopping short of its objective and in leaving the "new dealers" pondering a disappointment and seeking a substitute.

PLANNING METHOD

The third method has been planning—economic planning—as evidenced in the A.A.A. and N.R.A. The spectacular beneficent services of the N.R.A. in the elimination of child labor and in the education of American industry ot the idea that there is a proper minimum work wage and a proper maximum workday will never be forgotten by the industrial historian of this country but are now indeed already in the industrial historian's province. The immediate problem of the N.R.A. is to cleanse the codes of provisions which raise prices and check consumption faster than recovery can raise purchasing power and expand consumption.

On that problem the administration has acted so tardily that the initiative in it has been grasped by Senator BORAH and Senator NYE and other congressional critics who are well on their way now toward persuading the Congress next year to give the whole N.R.A. system a body blow by reinstating in our statute books the full force of our antitrust legislation against price fixings. Once more—in this matter as in the other matters mentioned—the administration finds itself not on the aggressive but on the defensive.

In the A.A.A., meanwhile, the advance in planning is now headed not by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace but by those twin planners from Alabama, Senator BANKHEAD and Representative BANKHEAD. The Bankhead cotton bill takes the voluntary agricultural planning of Mr. Wallace and carries it to its absolutely logical conclusion of compulsory planning. It obliges the individual cotton planter to abide by a plan whether he individually likes the plan or not.

CENTRAL COMMAND NEEDED

Any other sort of national planning is surely a mere play upon words. The General Staff of our Army, when it drafts a war plan, does not propose a consultation of the Illinois National Guard as to whether or not it will conform to it. Planning, if it is done at all in any actual sense, must be done by a central command, military or industrial. The Bankheads may be utterly wrong in ultimate economics. They are utterly right as logicians in the administration's immediate planning method.

But the administration accepts the Bankhead bill only because it politically must, and it swerves from applying the principle of it to agriculture in general. Again it flinches from its own portrait in the mirror.

Coming, then, to the fourth and final new-deal method we see "regulatory" measures such as the Securities Act, the foods and drugs bill and the stock-exchange control bill. In all these outstanding instances of this method the original provisions contrived by able and enthusiastic "new dealers" have been subjected, or are now on the point of being subjected, to drastic amendments by congressional analysts.

These analysts are moved primarily not by technical knowledge but by their appreciation of the reactions and sentiments of the concerned public. There has been strong public criticism, and now there is strong congressional amendatory zeal. The new-deal innovators are pushed into the wings. The spotlight is taken by legislative revisers and modifiers, who in some cases are wholly sympathetic to the new deal, but who in other cases are covert enemies to it and are endeavoring primarily to encompass its downfall.

Such are the actualities of the politics of the new deal in Washington today. The "new dealers" last year were in motion. Now, more and more, they are in trenches; and, more and more, it is the enemy, "supernew deal" or "antinew deal", that is in motion. Mr. Roosevelt needs now much more than his radiant popularity. He needs all his superb tactical skill at new political plays, and all his supreme strategical vision of new social issues and aims. He must again attack. Will he? I surmise, since he is what he is, that he will.

PRECEDENTS FOR RECOVERY MEASURES OF ADMINISTRATION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BARKLEY

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an able and illuminating address delivered last evening by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] in the National Radio Forum, carried over a coast-to-coast network of the National Broadcasting Co., on precedents for the recovery measures undertaken by the present administration.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TEXT OF ADDRESS

During recent weeks we have, by every form of publicity from backyard gossip to the front pages of the newspapers, been regaled with obsessions, predictions, consternations, reverberations, alliterations, asseverations, and hallucinations and revelations concerning some sort of revolution that seems to be in hiding just around the corner. Whether this is the same corner that sheltered so elusively the prosperity which was supposed to be located there for several years I am not in a position to state; though I have a hunch that some of those who were instrumental in the attempt to make a shrine out of the corner that shielded prosperity have had a hand in erecting the corner which is now shielding the revolution which is about to descend upon us.

I have no desire to quibble over words. I am not a quibbler over words. I dislike the habit of quibbling over anything. But we may perhaps dissipate our fears and console our souls with the reflection that there is nothing satanic about the word revolution. There is a great national organization now in annual session in this city eligibility for membership in which requires an unbroken line leading back to a revolution and some soldier who fought in that revolution.

WASHINGTON A REVOLUTIONARY

Washington, with all his aristocratic bearing and conservative reactions to public questions, was a revolutionary. He was the leader of the Revolution which made us a Nation, and he was probably the one indispensable man of that great historic accomplishment.

Jefferson was a revolutionary. So was Madison, the father of the Constitution. So was Monroe, who gave his name to an immortal American policy. Even Alexander Hamilton was revolutionary in the sense that he believed in and advocated a change in the existing order, and fought bravely and with distinction by the side of Washington to make that revolution effective.

Andrew Jackson was somewhat of a revolutionist, both personally and politically. He revolutionized the methods of appointment to public service. He revolutionized the banking system of the United States. He revolutionized some of the conceptions of his national character entertained by his enemies when he declared under dramatic circumstances that the Union must be preserved against sedition or secession anywhere.

LINCOLN'S ECONOMIC CHANGES

Abraham Lincoln was a revolutionary. He revolutionized the economic system in half the States of the Union, and as President of the United States he directed a 4 years' war to decide whether the Nation could stand undivided in adjusting itself to that economic and political revolution for which he was largely responsible.

In many other respects Lincoln showed his belief in changes which he felt were necessary in a growing and expanding national life.

Theodore Roosevelt was a revolutionist. He advocated what was termed the "square deal", which was only another name for a new deal, because at that time any sort of square deal was a new deal compared with the old deal to which the people were accustomed.

He advocated the recall of judicial decisions by popular election. This was certainly a revolutionary proposal. Nothing that has been suggested, brought forward, thought about, or dreamed of in the past year of the new deal exceeds the recall of judicial decisions in its revolutionary qualities.

Compared with the conceptions of the powers of the National Government entertained by some of those who framed it, the construction of the Panama Canal was certainly a revolutionary innovation.

THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE

Thomas Jefferson was perhaps the outstanding strict constructionist of his day. He feared the enlargement of the Federal powers. But when he became President he wanted to purchase Louisiana. He searched the Constitution for specific authority and found it not. But he wanted it. Finally he concluded that he could do it under the treaty-making power conferred upon the President, and in the exercise of this power he made a treaty with Napoleon and purchased that vast territory. But it was a revolutionary procedure. At the time it was charged that if he had not broken the Constitution he had at least bent it woefully. But we have Louisiana and all the States carved out of it.

At another time while he was President he found a surplus in the National Treasury. This is always a tempting situation. Jefferson found it so. He did not believe that Congress had the power to expend this surplus for the building of highways or the deepening of rivers or harbors. But we wanted to expend the surplus for that purpose. He asked the Congress to submit to the States an amendment to the Constitution empowering the National Government to build roads and improve rivers and harbors and engage in other internal improvements.

Madison, Monroe, Andrew Jackson, and James K. Polk all vetoed appropriations for these purposes on the ground that Congress had no such power.

AMENDMENT NOT PASSED

But the Constitution was never so amended. By judicial and legislative interpretation the Constitution was held to contain such powers under the commerce clause, the general welfare clause, and other elastic provisions of that great document. So that today the improvement of rivers and harbors, which are the instruments of commerce, and the construction of highways as the servants of the Postal System, and also our great Interstate Commerce System, are accepted and welcomed as a settled national policy. But as compared with the original conceptions of some of the framers of the Constitution and most of the early Presidents it was revolutionary. It was even unconstitutional.

In a similar sense Woodrow Wilson was a revolutionist. Theodore Roosevelt called it "a square deal." Franklin D. Roosevelt calls it "a new deal." Woodrow Wilson called it "the new freedom." The application of specific remedies in each case may have been different. That is, the particular remedy demanded by the particular situation confronted by the people and by these leaders of the people may have been different. But in each case the conception of the need and the remedy presupposed the creation of something that did not heretofore exist. And this ability to perceive the need for remedies and the ability to create and supply them is, after all, the real test of popular government. It is the stabilizing quality which in fact prevents revolutions of force and of blood.

AN ALTERNATIVE

If the power to adjust government to the conditions which must be dealt with by each generation did not exist, the only remedy would be the destruction of an impotent government and the building of a government fitted and qualified to deal with the problems of the new generation. Thus we would have a situation which would require that the people of each generation or each decade change the form and the character of their government, just as farmers have changed the instruments of husbandry, surgeons have changed the instruments of surgery, teachers have changed the methods of their teaching, preachers the methods of their preaching, and the traveling public the methods of their transportation.

While, therefore, as I stated in the beginning, the word "revolution" contains no diabolical implications, many of the transitions to which I have referred, and many thousands more to which I could refer, may be more softly designated as "evolutions."

That there has been a revolution in the practice of medicine and the science of medicine no man will deny. The transition from the universal practice a century and a half ago of bleeding a patient for every known disease to the skillful and life-saving delicacy of modern surgery has been and is a tribute to the genius of man throughout the world. But it was a revolution, or, if you prefer the word, it was an evolution in the treatment of injury and disease.

THE STAGECOACH ERA

The transition from the stagecoach of our forefathers to the modern Pullman car, the modern automobile, and the modern airplane has certainly been a revolution in the methods of transportation. Would we go back to the stagecoach? Let all who favor it say "aye."

The transition from the old custom of piling the ice from the mill pond in sawdust in the barn to the facility afforded by the electric refrigerator has certainly been a revolution in the art of refrigeration. I ask whether in the complex life which we lead today we would be willing to revert wholly to the mill pond, fond as we are of that familiar old place in story and tradition.

The transition from the old sickle and the wheat cradle with which our fathers garnered the grain for themselves and for a hungry world, to the modern reaper and combine which cuts, threshes, and sacks the grain as it goes along through the golden field, is certainly a revolution in the science of harvesting, and typifies many other similar revolutions and evolutions in the field of agriculture.

Examples of this constant change, this incessant growth, this impatient reaching out in every field of action by the human race throughout the world for something different and something better, could be multiplied without limit.

THE ONE EXCEPTION

Even those who object to change, to growth, to development, to elasticity in government, admit all this. It is only to a growth in government that they object.

But why, among all the sciences and the arts which have been studied or mastered by the race of men from the beginning of time, should government alone stand still? Why, among all the improvements which have been brought to the human race through the generations in other fields of endeavor should government alone tie itself to a hitching post and refuse to move with the upward procession?

By this question I am not to be understood as believing in our advocating the policy of opportunism in government; I am not suggesting that government as such should be swept off its feet or away from its moorings by every fantastic proposal that fantastic minds may create or propose.

But I do mean that any form of government that even claims to be efficient or responsive to public need must be an elastic government. It must be ready to adopt, and not afraid to adopt, experiments in the process of government just as the physician must adopt them, just as the manufacturer must adopt them, just as the great financial structure of this and every nation must now and then adopt them.

THE NEED FOR COURAGE

It must be willing to go up what may turn out to be blind alleys now and then. Without the courage to embark upon these political and governmental explorations and experimentations once in a while, or even constantly, government could never find its way 3 inches from the status quo, and the people would ultimately find themselves constrained in so immovable a straitjacket that they would have to destroy the old order by a forceful revolution in order to establish an order and a government that could serve them by peaceful evolution.

In view of all these things and in view of the stable quality of the American people which has been established in the century and a half of our history, it is nothing short of the utmost folly for men or women to conjure up in their frightened minds the specter of unconstitutional revolution, the destruction of our ancient landmarks, the surrender to communism, or bolshevism or fascism, or the arrival of a dictator marching under the banner of goblinism.

If Thomas Jefferson, without specific constitutional authority, could purchase the whole of Louisiana, what is to prevent Franklin D. Roosevelt, under the same Constitution and without specific constitutional authority, from purchasing a few million acres of waste or unproductive lands in the public interest and for the public welfare?

If Theodore Roosevelt, without specific constitutional authority, could buy from Panama a 10-mile strip across the Isthmus of Panama and dig a canal through it for the benefit of American commerce and as an instrument of national defense, what is to prevent Congress from giving Franklin D. Roosevelt the power to make a few agreements by which some of that commerce may flow to other nations through that same canal?

EXCHANGE REGULATION

If Congress has the power to regulate the freight rate on every pound of commerce that finds its way across State lines and across the continent by rail, water, motor, or airplane; if Congress can regulate the size of cars, the length of trains, the issue of securities, the hours of service, the wages of laborers, and the income of those who own these instruments of commerce, who can say that it has not the power to regulate a stock exchange where the securities of all who have invested in these transportation agencies and all who use them are bought and sold in every city and hamlet of this Republic?

If Congress had the power to revolutionize our banking system by the passage of the Federal Reserve Act, who can deny to it the power to guarantee a modicum of safety to those who intrust these banking institutions with their lifetime accumulations?

If the Federal Government has the right and the power to inspect and to pass judgment on every article of food and every drug which is consumed by the people of the United States—a power and a right which has been upheld by the only authority that can finally adjudicate it, the Supreme Court—who shall deny to that same Congress the power and the right to set up boards or commissions to enforce codes of fair practice among the manufacturers of these articles or other articles over which Congress may have regulatory power?

If the National Government can fix the hours and the compensations and the conditions of employment of those who minister to the necessities of interstate commerce through transportation, who shall say that Congress has not the power to set up the machinery or provide by legislation the conditions under which more men may work and fewer men will be without work?

PUBLIC-WORKS PROGRAM

If the national Government has the power to clean out a harbor or deepen a river or build a road, so that the people may go or carry what they have from place to place throughout the Nation with greater comfort, speed, and efficiency, shall we deny that this same Government has the power to provide a public-works program through which more commodities may be consumed and more of the facilities of life and of comfort may be obtained.

If the national Government may under the Constitution create a banking system to loan money to the people and their institutions, why may it not set up an agency of its own in an emergency to do what the banks, due to the emergency, cannot do?

If Aaron Burr could be tried and acquitted for a conspiracy to destroy the Government because of a little conference on Blennerhassetts Island in the Ohio River, cannot a few professors meet around a beefsteak at a restaurant in Washington and exchange views about things as they are or ought to be without sending a series of shivers of earthquake proportions up and down the spines of other professors remotely located, who hear of it around other beefsteaks also remotely located?

DENIES PLOT

Those who are now directing the destinies of this Government are not seeking, directly or indirectly, to undermine the foundations of constitutional government in the United States of America. They are not seeking to fasten upon the American people any system that is un-American or that will take away the right of the American people to pass upon the acts of their Government in the same constitutional way which has always been theirs.

But those who are directing the Government of the United States at present are trying to apply the powers contained in the American Constitution to the wise solution of the great problems which now beset the Nation in a way that will justify the flexibility and adjustability put in that document by its great framers.

It is not strange to hear able men dispute over the constitutionality of legislation or executive policies. This dispute has been in progress ever since the Nation was established and will continue so long as we are a free and intelligent people. But there is a final reservoir of authority upon that subject. It is the Supreme Court. The people trust that Court. They trust this Nation. They have confidence in themselves. They know that there is no insidious or harmful revolution that can transpire in this Nation without their consent. But they know likewise that evolution in government is as inevitable as the growth of children and of trees. They are not afraid to welcome and espouse such growth.

CONSERVATION PROGRESS IN 1934

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a memorandum on Conservation Progress in 1934, with a brief digest of the new laws, prepared by Hon. Harry B. Hawes, former United States Senator from the State of Missouri, and a former member and vice chairman of the Special Senate Committee on Conservation of Wild Life Resources.

Harry Hawes is one of the grand men in the conservation movement of this country and stands square shouldered for everything worth while and practical in the restoration of our game birds and animals and fish.

Outdoor Life, one of the great national wild-life magazines, each year presents its annual award of a gold medal to the conservationist whose achievements in wild-life conservation during the preceding year had been most outstanding. Harry Hawes received this medal in 1931.

He is not only a distinguished leader in the outdoor and wild-life field, but he is a warm, sincere, and loyal friend whose paramount interest today is in the welfare of the creatures of our wilderness world.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON CONSERVATION PROGRESS

On January 6, 1934, at Boston, I undertook to analyze the national conservation situation existing at that time. That address expressed the hope that big things were just ahead. That hope has been realized.

Administration of the legislative program still remains. That will take time, and the degree of its success will depend largely on those in charge.

A daily increasing mail, in the form of inquiries, makes it necessary to give by way of reply a short review of what has happened thus far.

Never before in our national history have our Congress and our Federal administrators given more attention, consideration, and assistance to the friends of the big "outdoors" than those now in control.

Almost exceeding in importance the legislation recently enacted has been the development of a vigorous national interest in this subject.

Four years ago it was my pleasure to suggest the appointment of a committee of the United States Senate, entitled "the Special Committee on Conservation of Wild Life Resources", consisting of seven Senators. These Senators are now recognized as authorities.

This example was followed in 1934 by the creation of a similar committee in the House of Representatives. There are 15 members on this latter committee.

The President's attitude was defined in a conference held with Members of Congress and leaders of the conservation movement on December 20, last year. We all left that conference filled with enthusiasm. It resulted in the calling of a national conference for the 25th of January. This was held on that date and attracted a large attendance.

In the meantime the Secretary of Agriculture, with the approval of the President, had appointed a committee of three to prepare a national plan for wild-life restoration. At the time of the conference on January 25, this plan was only in tentative form, but the feeling of cooperation was so strong that it was presented to the President on the following day.

The special committee selected by Secretary Wallace has now completed and presented a plan to the President for his consideration.

This plan contemplates the utilization of submarginal lands in a vast restoration program, including migratory waterfowl, upland game birds, animals, and other forms of wild life.

The President's committee is composed of three well-known and enthusiastic conservationists—Thomas H. Beck, Jay N. Darling, and Aldo Leopold. Their report, already submitted to the President, is comprehensive and illuminating.

JAY N. DARLING, CHIEF OF BIOLOGICAL SURVEY

Conservationists were pleased, I might even say inspired, with the selection of Jay N. Darling, of Iowa, to succeed Paul G. Redington, as head of the Biological Survey. Mr. Redington was transferred, at his request, to an important post in the Forest Service. Mr. Darling's acceptance of this position marks another high spot in conservation. I have the hope that ultimately there will be created what might be termed a conservation secretary under the Secretary of Agriculture and that Mr. Darling will accept that post. He has under him in the Biological Survey men of experience, specialists in their way, who have been developed by long years of service.

An article by Mr. Darling was inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on February 26, 1934. It is worthy of careful consideration. His is a broad view. His philosophy is that nature should have a chance in wild-life restoration.

THE PURCHASE OF SUBMARGINAL LANDS

The President's order to expend $25,000,000 in the purchase of submarginal land and withdraw it from commercial agriculture, without additional expenditure of funds or cost to the Government, affords a great opportunity to conservationists. It means a vast expansion of our public domain. It is a comparatively simple matter, if rightly administered, to place part of this added Federal domain in the breeding grounds and along the flight lanes of migratory birds, and use other portions for the development of upland game birds and animals.

Out of a measure intended solely for the purpose of assisting agriculture has come an opportunity.

As many of these areas contain fresh water, this naturally suggested the development and propagation of fresh-water fish, so we have now in the conservation picture not only the Secretary of Agriculture, but in addition the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Commerce, and, under the coordination bill, practically the entire Presidential Cabinet.

But the big accomplishment was of a general character in stimulating national interests in this subject and assuring a permanent place for it in the minds of legislators and administrators.

This will inspire Governors of States, State game administrators, and State legislators to remodel and strengthen the game and fish programs of the various States.

Before answering numerous inquiries about the three big bills which have passed Congress, it might be well to review the legislation which had been secured prior thereto.

THE LACEY ACT

The Lacey Act regulating interstate commerce in wild birds and animals, passed in May 1900, was the first definite expression of Congress on this subject. This act specifies "that the duties and powers of the Department of Agriculture are enlarged to include the preservation, distribution, introduction, and restoration of game and other wild birds", and the act further outlines its objects and purposes as being "to aid in the restoration of such birds in those parts of the United States adapted thereto where the same have become scarce or extinct."

This part of the act was never closely followed by the Department of Agriculture and the Biological Survey. The principal accomplishment of the Lacey Act has been to stop interstate commerce in wild birds and animals and to regulate their importation. Under these provisions it became unlawful to introduce or import into the United States the mongoose, the flying foxes, the fruit bats, or to make further importations of the English sparrow, the starling, and other birds and animals which might be injurious to the interests of agriculture and horticulture. These provisions of the act have been enforced throughout the years.

THE MIGRATORY BIRD TREATY WITH CANADA

Following the passage of the Lacey Act many legislative attempts, beginning in 1904, were made to protect migratory waterfowl. One such attempt became a law which was subsequently declared unconstitutional by the courts (act of Mar. 4, 1913).

This court decision forced the negotiation of a treaty between the United States and Canada protecting migratory birds. The treaty was finally proclaimed on December 8, 1916.

THE MIGRATORY BIRD TREATY ACT

The Migratory Bird Treaty Act became a law on July 3, 1918, and was passed to give effect to the treaty between the United States and Canada. The Secretary of Agriculture was authorized to make regulations for the hunting, taking, transportation, etc., of the waterfowl and other migratory game birds coming within the scope of the treaty. It is under this treaty act that all waterfowl regulations have been promulgated.

THE ALASKA GAME LAW

The next important legislation was the Alaska game law approved on January 13, 1925. This act set up a commission composed of residents of the Territory with a chief executive officer in charge who was also to be the representative of the Biological Survey in Alaska. This act gives to the commission jurisdiction over all of the fur bearers, the big and smaller game animals, and the waterfowl of Alaska. It might be said in passing that the work of this commission has been commendable. It is one of the real accomplishments of the Federal Government in wild-life conservation.

THE MIGRATORY BIRD CONSERVATION ACT

The Migratory Bird Conservation Act was approved on February 18, 1929. The Migratory Bird Conservation Commission, created by this act, consists of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of the Interior, 2 Members of the Senate, and 2 Members of the House. The Commission is authorized to consider and pass upon all lands recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture for acquisition as waterfowl refuges.

Appropriations were authorized under the act as follows: $75,000 for the fiscal year of 1930; $200,000 for the fiscal year of 1931; $600,000 for the fiscal year of 1932; $1,000,000 for the fiscal year of 1933, and $1,000,000 for each succeeding year thereafter for 6 years, and then $200,000 a year thereafter for acquisition and maintenance.

While these authorizations seem imposing, the appropriations have fallen far short of the figures mentioned. Five years of the proposed 10-year program have expired, yet the actual appropriations have been less than 50 percent of the amount authorized.

UPPER MISSISSIPPI WILD-LIFE REFUGE

On June 7, 1924, the Upper Mississippi Wild Life and Fish Refuge Act was approved. It had been my privilege to introduce this bill in the House of Representatives of which I was then a member.

This bill established a great wild-life-producing and public recreational area on the upper Mississippi and embraces 300 miles of the Mississippi River from above Wabasha, Minn., to a point below McGregor, Iowa. It borders on four States—Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Minnesota—and embraces 341,000 acres of land and water.

In addition to the fishes that abound in these waters, especially the black bass, there are to be found many muskrats and other small fur-bearing animals. Migratory waterfowl are more and more attracted to the area by reason of the protection that is afforded them within the refuge.

This act for the first time committed the Government to specific appropriations for the creation of wild-life refuges.

THE BEAR RIVER MARSHES IN UTAH

One of the most important migratory waterfowl restoration projects established by Federal appropriation is known as the "Bear River Marsh", in Utah, north and west of Ogden. Here a vast waterfowl death-trap has been converted into a great feeding and breeding area. After an 8-year battle, on April 23, 1928, Congress appropriated $300,000 to dike and later flood about 40,000 acres with fresh water, the second largest waterfowl breeding area in Continental United States. It is now a reality, water having been turned into it in 1930. Waterfowl once more are nesting in this region, which is growing up in native marsh grasses ideally adapted to feeding and breeding.

CHEYENNE BOTTOMS IN KANSAS

In June 1930 Congress authorized an appropriation of $250,000 for the restoration of Cheyenne Bottoms in Kansas. The region is a marshy catch-basin area of 20,000 acres in which thousands of waterfowl formerly rested on their migrations north and south. With no constant water supply, this area dries up periodically and heavy losses of young ducks occur. Only $50,000 of the congressional authorization was appropriated. Thirty-nine thousand dollars of this amount was used in surveys and examination of titles. The balance of the money has never been appropriated. However, it is now listed as one of the projects, in case the President approves the report, for use of submarginal lands.

ALBEMARLE CANAL LOCK

In 1930 Congress provided $500,000 to restore the Albemarle Canal Lock near Norfolk, Va., to stop the flow of salt water and pollution into Currituck Sound and Back Bay, thereby restoring 300 square miles of waterfowl wintering grounds and black-bass producing waters. Joseph P. Knapp and William E. Corey are to be congratulated for this signal achievement.

The black bass bill, which I also had the honor to sponsor in Congress, prohibited the interstate shipment of black bass for commercial purposes.

The black bass bill for the District of Columbia directed national attention to these subjects.

But what immediately concerns most inquirers are the effects of the new laws just passed by Congress and approved by the President.

DUCK STAMP ACT

The Duck Stamp Act provides that all migratory waterfowl hunters must purchase a $1 stamp at convenient post offices, the stamp to be attached to the State hunting license.

Not less than 90 percent of the fund raised by the sale of the stamps will be available for the acquisition, operation, and maintenance of inviolable migratory-bird sanctuaries under the provisions of the Migratory Bird Conservation Act. The other 10 percent will be used for administrative expenses and for the printing and distribution of the stamps.

No one knows exactly the number of migratory waterfowl hunters. It has been estimated by officials and other agencies that the number is between 500,000 and 1,500,000. No matter how much is raised through the purchase of these stamps, it will be that much more than is obtained at the present time, and once this fund is established Congress can be called upon to carry out its obligations under the Norbeck-Andresen Act by bringing the appropriations up to date. The program can be pushed forward just as rapidly as the money becomes available. Time is the essence of migratory waterfowl restoration. Waterfowl areas must be purchased and restored so that birds may use them. Some of the more important areas should be acquired this year.

THE COORDINATION ACT

The Coordination Act was before the Senate for 2 years. In itself it is a broad restoration program. Its title is significant, a bill "To promote the conservation of wild life, fish, and game." Its first section announces a policy for the development of "a Nation-wide program of wild-life conservation and rehabilitation."

The Secretaries of Agriculture and Commerce are authorized to assist and cooperate with other Federal and with State and private agencies in increasing the supply of game and in combating diseases.

Section 2 brings to an end the long fight against pollution of our inland waters. Investigations are authorized to determine the effects of pollutants upon wild life, and it calls upon the Secretaries of Agriculture and Commerce to report to Congress with recommendations for remedial legislation.

Section 3 gives opportunity to the Bureau of Fisheries and the Biological Survey to make use of all Federally impounded waters. Fish hatcheries and migratory waterfowl resting and nesting areas are authorized on reclamation projects where large bodies of water are stored for irrigation and other purposes.

Wherever economically practicable, fishways or other devices are authorized, such as dams to take care of the migration of fish from the upper to the lower, and from the lower to the upper waters of these dams.

Section 4 calls upon the Office of Indian Affairs, the Bureau of Fisheries, and the Biological Survey to prepare a plan for the better protection of wild life upon all of the Indian reservations and unallotted Indian lands.

This ties in three Departments of the Government—Agriculture, Commerce, and Interior. Once this plan for control and protection of wild life on the Indian reservations is promulgated by these Secretaries, wild life will immediately increase in these regions.

Section 5 is in itself a comprehensive wild-life program. Under it the Biological Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries are directed to survey the wild-life resources of the public domain on any lands owned or leased by the Federal Government and to develop a program for the maintenance of an adequate supply of wild life on these areas.

This section also authorizes the establishment on the public domain of game farms and fish hatcheries of such proportions as are necessary to replenish the supply of game, fur-bearing animals, and fish.

The word "game" is here used in its broader meaning which includes birds and four-footed animals. The only limitation on the establishment of these game farms and fish hatcheries is that the State in which the farm or hatchery is to be located must give its consent. Such consent legislation has been given in all but one State.

Section 6 gives broad authority to the Federal agencies to cooperate with all other agencies, whether private or public, engaged in conservation work. It also authorizes the Federal Government to accept donations of lands, moneys, and other aids in the development of the wild-life program provided in the act.

The coordination act is probably the most important and far-reaching in its effects of the three bills. It puts every department of the Government upon notice to consider conservation and gives real power to different bureaus. It will be found to be of great assistance to the President's committee. It gives authority where heretofore cooperation was merely voluntary. Conservationists will find much more in this act than they may have anticipated.

With adequate appropriations and intelligent leadership, the coordination act will give to the lovers of outdoor America, a restoration of wild life which a few years ago appeared impossible.

The machinery is set up, the agencies have their instructions. Many of these plans and surveys should be completed this year and recommendations should be forthcoming so that at the next session of Congress adequate appropriations may be provided.

NATIONAL FOREST REFUGE ACT

This is an act which Senator JOSEPH T. ROBINSON had endeavored to pass for the previous 14 years.

It is the correlate of the other two acts already commented on.

In brief, the act provides that the President, upon recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Commerce may, by public proclamation, establish in the national forests, fish and game sanctuaries which shall be devoted to the increase of game birds, game animals, and fish which are indigenous to the area.

The only limitation on the right of the President to establish these sanctuaries is that consent of the State in which the sanctuary is sought to be established must first be obtained.

The Secretaries of Agriculture and Commerce are charged with the execution of the act and are authorized to make rules and regulations for the administration of the sanctuaries.

This act will be of special benefit to the Western States where national forests have their eminence. All forms of wild life will be benefited.

WORK ADVANCED, BUT MUST CONTINUE

The scope of each of these acts is well worthy of study. A wild-life program for the next generation has been established. Our task now is to urge adequate appropriations for carrying on the work of restoration.

None of these results could have been brought about without the active cooperation of all the great national game and fish organizations of America.

Nor could it have been done without the active assistance of various State and local organizations. They were urged to express their opinion to official Washington, and this they have done.

Now they have one other thing to do; that is to follow closely the administration of these laws, and to do their share of the work locally.

It is a great opportunity for our 13 million hunters and fishermen to keep up the good work—not permit the enthusiasm to die. It is at its high peak now.

The groundwork for a big Federal program has been laid. To complete the structure will require years of intelligent, organized effort in which everyone interested in the outdoors must participate in order to achieve the desired end.

In some of our States a high degree of efficiency has been attained. Restoration programs of a very practical and efficient character have been carried through, but there are other States that lag behind, and to these the appeals of all classes of our citizens must be made.

The one who seems to have had the hardest time in recent years is the farmer, and this conservation program will be of especial benefit to him. The story should be taken to him from our State universities, from the game and fish departments of the States, from the Governors of States in their messages to their legislatures, from the farm bureaus and agencies, and from the local, State, and national wild-life organizations.

It is now a matter of following through, holding what we have, and assisting in supporting an intelligent, sympathetic administration.

INTERNAL REVENUE TAXATION

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments to the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am not opposed to the motion, but I wish to say a few words before action shall be taken upon it.

I think the revenue bill which we recently considered is one of the best of its kind ever passed by the Senate. I cannot help but notice, however, that certain interests in the country are largely condemning the bill as it passed the Senate.

I desire to read from an Associated Press dispatch. The Associated Press is the greatest, or one of the greatest, news-gathering agencies in the world. It ought to confine itself to the gathering of news and the giving of news information to the people of the country. However, I cannot help noticing, on the part of this news agency, what, to me, seems to be a tendency to step beyond what is its real object and what ought to be the real excuse for its existence. In the Sunday newspapers there was a long article from the Associated Press. I am not going to read it all, but I want to read one or two quotations from it. Among other things, it was said:

Swelling opposition to the Senate provisions for a 10-percent addition to income taxes for 1 year and for abolition of the consolidated returns greeted the new revenue bill yesterday in the House. Democratic and Republican leaders joined in criticising the measure.

What I desire to call attention to is not with reference to an item of news but to an expression of opinion by the use of the words "swelling opposition." If the representative of the Associated Press had been desirous of forming a conclusion instead of sending out news, it would not have been difficult for him to find among the membership of the House of Representatives condemnation of such language. "Swelling opposition to the Senate provisions." That is not an item of news. That is a conclusion drawn by the representative of the Associated Press and sent all over the country. It is quite common and, in my judgment, a part of the propaganda that is being circulated throughout the country to the detriment and against the provisions of the revenue bill as it was passed by the Senate.

Later on in this article there are quotations from various persons, some of them in condemnation of the action of the Senate, some of them rather discourteous in their nature. For instance, it is said, in quoting one Member of the House:

> It is evident that the so-called "Senate Progressives" ran away with the Finance Committee.

And so forth. That is one of the things which I think has a tendency to create prejudice on the part of the reader against the progressive group, if there is such a group in the Senate as distinguished from the remainder of the Senate, and also to create a sentiment in the country in opposition to the bill as it passed the Senate.

Another quotation is:

> The Senate always has to show its superior knowledge. If it did not, there would not be much excuse for its existence.

That, as a criticism coming from a Member of the coordinate branch of the legislative body, is rather discourteous. It is exceedingly misleading. I desire to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the fact that the only place in the legislative history of the bill where it received open criticism, and where there was absolute freedom of debate and freedom of action in the matter of offering amendments, was here in the Senate. The bill passed the House of Representatives under a special rule, from which I quote as follows:

> That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 16 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment. No amendments shall be in order to said bill except amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, and said amendments shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding.

So this great bill for raising revenue came to the Senate of the United States without the representatives of the people ever having had an opportunity to offer amendments unless those amendments were approved by the Ways and Means Committee. That committee consisted of 25 members. Thirteen constituted a majority. The Members of the House of Representatives—a body of patriotic, industrious statesmen selected by the people of the country, comprising nearly 450 Members—were all deprived of the right to offer amendments unless they received the approval of 13 picked men. None of them dared say a word in debate unless they were given time by one man on each side, constituting the leaders of the respective parties in the consideration of that bill in the House of Representatives. So when the bill reached the Senate it was considered for the first time under freedom of debate, and with the right to offer amendments.

It is not surprising, therefore, when the bill was first considered by a body that was absolutely free to act, that it was amended in many particulars. Most of the amendments, particularly the ones referred to and criticized by the Associated Press, were amendments which levied increased taxation upon the very wealthy of the country; and it is not surprising that there should come from those influences a propaganda against the action taken by the Senate.

I do not agree with all the provisions of the bill as it passed the Senate. Some amendments were rejected that I should have liked to see adopted; but as a whole, instead of its being a case where the Senate only wanted to "show its superior knowledge", and if it did not do so there "would not be much excuse for its existence", the fact is that the Senate has made of that bill one of the best bills ever presented to the country. When the country realizes that this body was the only place where there was freedom of action on the part of the representatives of the people in the consideration of the bill there will, I believe, grow up a sentiment that will demand that the amendments, drawing revenue from the accumulated wealth of millionnaires everywhere, shall be retained in the bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LONG. I was called from the Chamber. Was the rule which the Senator has read one adopted for the bill we have just sent back to the House?

Mr. NORRIS. The one we are now about to send back.

Mr. LONG. They have already adopted a rule?

Mr. NORRIS. They adopted the rule before they took up the bill.

Mr. LONG. As I understand from what the Senator read, the House is practically foreclosed against voting on our amendments.

Mr. NORRIS. No; as I showed from the rule, the membership of the House were denied the privilege of offering amendments when the bill was up for consideration in the House of Representatives.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to ask whether or not conferees on a bill are required to keep secret the consideration given to the bill in conference, or whether their proceedings are public records?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can only speak from experience. He does not know that there is any rule on the subject. The Chair knows, however, that there is no way by which the proceedings of a conference can be kept secret if any member of the conference desires to tell about them. [Laughter.] The Chair himself has had that experience.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. HARRISON, Mr. KING, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. REED, and Mr. COUZENS conferees on the part of the Senate.

CANCELATION OF AIR-MAIL CONTRACTS

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, in view of the many rumors that have been going around Washington during the past several months with reference to secret-service methods being adopted and put in force by the administration, an editorial which appeared last Sunday in the New York Herald Tribune is rather enlightening. It is entitled "The Ogpu at Washington?"

I send the editorial to the desk and ask to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the editorial will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of Sunday, Apr. 15, 1934]

THE OGPU AT WASHINGTON?

The revelation that Charles A. Lindbergh was questioned secretly for 4 hours by a Department of Justice agent following his appearance before the Senate Post Offices Committee a month ago makes unpleasant and disturbing news. Following so closely upon the cancelation of the air-mail contracts—an utterly unjust and dictatorial abuse of public power—this resort to star chamber tactics calls for a strict investigation.

The test of the character of Colonel Ristine's investigation lies in the stenographic report thereof. Senator AUSTIN does well to announce that he will insist that this secret record be produced before the Black committee. Were the questions designed to develop constructive advice? Or were they the grueling to which a district attorney subjects a suspect? The record will speak for itself.

If it was a grilling, as is charged, the episode will constitute one more milepost on the road from normal American processes of justice to the Russian system. As such it is of deep concern to the whole Nation. Mr. Lindbergh can take care of himself on any witness stand, as he has demonstrated. Such scrupulous integrity and clear-eyed courage as are his are proof against the assaults of any browbeating inquisition. But the resort to such tactics would constitute a vicious and highly dangerous precedent and deserve the sternest rebuke.

Incidentally it would be interesting to know whether Commissar Farley played any part in instigating this experiment with Ogpu methods. Having punished the air-mail companies without the pretense of a trial, did he perhaps think that a little terrorizing of a hostile witness might help out his case? The country is already greatly in the debt of Senator WARREN R. AUSTIN, of Vermont, for taking up the air-mail fight. Here is another opportunity for his clear, fair questioning in the pursuit of truth.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Indiana that the able editorial in the very excellent publication referred to is based upon statements or construction or interpretation which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], having charge of the investigation, says are wholly in error. Since he insists that they are in error, and that the information on which the editorial is founded has been the cause of an error, I beg to state to the Senator from Indiana that the facts stated in the editorial are disputed by those in charge of the investigation.

THE LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD CO.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on the 2d of April, during a discussion by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] of the utilities and power question, some reference was made by him to a connection between the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. and some power company about which I know nothing. Mr. W. R. Cole, the president of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., seeing those remarks in the RECORD, has written me a letter with reference to the Senator's discussion, and I ask that the letter be read by the clerk for the information of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have no objection whatever to the reading of the letter if it is understood that I may take the time of the Senate to add a little postscript to it in the way of a reply. I realize that this is the morning hour, and that probably, unless we had such an understanding to begin with, I would consume time which the Senate wanted to devote to the consideration of the calendar. Therefore I request that either I be allowed time to answer the letter or that the Senator defer its reading until later, when I may have the time on some question then before the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection to the Senator's having all the time he desires, because I know nothing whatever about the circumstances.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that, but I do not want to take up time in advance when under the rules I would not be entitled to the time unless the Senate understood about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will defer the request to a more convenient hour.

VIEWS OF ARIZONA EDITOR ON RECOVERY MEASURES

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I fondly believed, for some years, that I was sterilized and vaccinated against the vicious habit of reading letters into the RECORD, but it now appears that the habit has recurred.

My most constant and most savage critic is a leading Democratic daily newspaper in Arizona, to wit, the Arizona Daily Star. I have received a letter from the editor of that journal; and his arguments in opposing my views on certain public questions are so well stated that I telegraphed to him securing his permission to have the letter read into the RECORD.

I now read my telegram to the editor:

APRIL 15, 1934.

Mr. W. R. MATHEWS,
Editor and Publisher the Arizona Daily Star,
Tucson, Ariz.:

Your letter of April 10 received. You are one of Arizona's leading journalists, and your letter ably argues for your views on seven subjects of legislation now before Congress. Inasmuch as I am at variance with you and do not agree with your conclusions therein expressed except that I do concur with your opinion that the President should be granted the power to negotiate the reciprocal treaties, I hereby request permission to print your letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Please do not be thin-skinned but imitate me as I am pachydermatous. If you grant me such permission, I shall, of course, print your letter without any deletion. Please wire me.

Kind regards.

ASHURST.

I now send the letter to the Secretary's desk and ask to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE ARIZONA DAILY STAR,
Tucson, Ariz., April 10, 1934.

Senator HENRY F. ASHURST,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR HENRY: It is with some misgivings that I write you, because, in the first place, I am loath to add to the burden of your overwhelming mail. I have refused countless times to write you at the behest of many different people. In the second place, I have doubts, even though you take the time to read and consider what I have to say in this letter, whether what I say will have any effect on you. I sometimes think that both you and CARL, and even Mrs. GREENWAY, do just the opposite of what I recommend.

I am writing to you concerning certain legislation the administration has introduced that, in my opinion, from impartial observation, is definitely delaying recovery. The securities bill is one. It has practically killed all underwriting of securities. The obligation an issuing house assumes in issuing securities under this act imposes a burden by the practically unlimited endorsement it requires that no honest and reputable security house would or should assume. On the other hand, there is practically nothing in the act to prevent unscrupulous promoters from meeting the terms of the act and then using the fact that they have had their securities registered as a means of implying governmental endorsement of their project. The liability imposed upon them is nothing, because they are here today and gone tomorrow. The fact that no securities of any appreciable amount have been issued shows the disastrous effects of this law, and this fact is reflected by the inability of industry to borrow for long terms, except from the Government, for purposes of plant improvement and expansion. I believe this act has gone entirely too far. Much of the act is needed and desired, but why burn down the barn to kill the rats?

The second piece of legislation is the proposed stock-exchange regulation. I cannot emphasize too strongly the fact that a daily cash market requires speculative activity. Even the Government has had to recognize this fact in supporting a market for Government securities during times of stress. Here again I think the administration is insisting upon burning down the barn to kill the rats.

The third piece of legislation is the Bankhead compulsory cotton bill. The fact that the Government should even countenance the idea of compulsion is a sad commentary on our times. However, remember the fact that within the past 3 months the Supreme Court has twice stated that the ginning of cotton is not a matter subject to legislation under the interstate commerce law. Moreover, the so-called "liberals" of the Supreme Court wrote the opinion, and now you Members of Congress ignore that fact and go blindly ahead and attempt to enact a law which is clearly unconstitutional, if our Constitution still means anything. I refer you particularly to the excellent exposition that Senator BAILEY, of North Carolina, made, and I tell you frankly I am ashamed that neither of the two Senators from Arizona had one word to say in opposition to this obnoxious bill.

The fourth piece of pernicious legislation, I believe, is the proposed unemployment insurance bill. To impose an additional burden on industry at a time when industry is struggling to recover would defeat the very purpose of the bill. I think it would be much better for the unemployed to be put back to work rather than to be called upon to pay the penalty while the administration experiments on them as though they were a bunch of guinea pigs.

The fifth piece of pernicious legislation is the silver legislation. I want to call your attention to the fact that Arizona will not benefit particularly by silver legislation. Mr. Beckett, of the Phelps-Dodge Corporation, told me recently that the byproduct of copper that is coming from the increased silver and gold mining is already proving a serious factor to control. Arizona's interest is primarily in copper and not in silver. The passage of silver legislation would create a temporary boom, but it would have a terrible aftermath. The passage of silver legislation would not help trade with the Orient as is popularly and so frequently said. It would not raise the purchasing power of the silver-using countries. The purchasing power of the silver-using countries depends entirely upon what they produce and what goods we are willing to accept from them in payment for what we sell them. If they were to ship us silver in payment of goods, it would be only a short time until their stores of silver bullion would be exhausted. Tell me how, then, would they be able to purchase from us except by the exchange of goods? The remonetization of silver has no chance whatever unless it is done on an international basis.

The sixth piece of legislation is the Wagner labor bill. The making of every business in the country, regardless of its character, subject to the terms of this bill is a gross invasion of American rights. Labor has an inalienable right to organize and to strike, but neither labor nor the American Government has a right to force every business in America employing two or more people to accept organized labor as represented by the American Federation of Labor. This bill will enable the American Federation of Labor to grow into an organization stronger than the Government itself. I think, therefore, the bill should be defeated.

Finally, allow me to say that business is improving, but the process of improvement is retarded on account of the threats all of this legislation promotes. If the Securities Act were amended so as not to require the vast amount of expense a small business must undergo in order to get its securities registered, and if it were amended so as not to impose an impossible liability on reputable issuing houses, if the power were granted the President to negotiate reciprocal treaties, if all other legislation were killed and Congress adjourned, you Members of Congress would find, on reassembling next January that many of the ills with which you are trying to deal would have been cured in a natural way, so that your problems would be much simplified and you would not be having the tremendous burden that is now wearing all of you out.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

W. R. MATHEWS.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, in connection with the communication just presented to the Senate, I desire unanimous consent to offer an item clipped from the Washington Post of this date, sent out as news by the Associated Press and entitled as follows:

Cotton prices drop $1 under liquidation.

The date being April 16. I desire to read just one paragraph, as follows:

Reports that the Senate had adopted the conference report on the Bankhead bill Saturday afternoon and that early House approval of the measure was considered probable were without apparent market influence as traders turned their attention to other developments.

I ask that the entire article may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COTTON PRICES DROP $1 UNDER LIQUIDATION—MAY CLOSES AT 11.63 AS GENERAL MARKET FALLS 22 TO 23 POINTS

NEW YORK, April 16.—A decline of slightly more than $1 a bale in cotton today carried the market down to the lowest levels since early February. There was active general liquidation influenced by weakness of grains and silver. July sold off from 11.95 to 11.73 and closed at 11.75, with the general market finishing barely steady at net declines of 22 to 28 points.

The opening was 2 to 5 points lower. Liverpool was a fair seller here on narrower differences during the first hour, but the market showed a fair resistance to each point decline on scale down price fixing for domestics and foreign trade account.

Reports that the Senate had adopted the conference report on the Bankhead bill Saturday afternoon and that early House approval of the measure was considered probable were without apparent market influence as traders turned their attention to other developments.

BECOMES MORE ACTIVE

Following a moderate turnover during the morning at slowly sagging prices, the market became more active and easier in the midafternoon under rather general liquidation with the lower levels uncovering stop orders.

Locals were active sellers on the decline and offerings also came from Wall Street and wire houses. May eased from 11.84 to 11.62 and October from 12.08 to 11.86 with final prices at or within a few points of the lowest.

Washington advices indicating that silver legislation was not on the administration's program for this session of Congress came in for attention in connection with the weakness of silver and the apparent lessening possibilities for inflationary legislation of this character.

Exports today, 16,477, making 6,343,690 so far this season. Port receipts, 11,355. United States port stocks, 3,067,429.

FUTURES PRICE RANGE

	High	Low	Last
May	11.84	11.62	11.63–65
July	11.95	11.73	11.75–76
October	12.08	11.86	11.87
December	12.21	11.96	11.97–98
January	12.26	12.04	12.04
March	12.35	12.10	12.10

Spot steady; middling, 11.80.

COTTONSEED OIL

Bleachable cottonseed oil was easy today, closing 5 to 16 points net lower under increased liquidation and commission-house selling, promoted by the weakness of grains and the lower lard and cotton markets.

Weakness of the stock market was a factor. Sales, 56 contracts; bleachspot nominal; May closed 5.22; July, 5.42; September, 5.62; October, 5.67.

PURCHASE OF VEHICLES FROM EMERGENCY RECOVERY FUNDS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next order of business is resolutions coming over from a preceding day.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I call up Senate Resolution 217.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the resolution be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is that a resolution coming over from a former day?

Mr. DICKINSON. It is on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then it will have to come up by unanimous consent or on motion. The Senator from Iowa will be recognized for the purpose of making a motion, unless the Senate is going to proceed immediately with the consideration of the calendar.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may the clerk state the resolution?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I do not believe there will be any objection to the resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator state what it is?

Mr. DICKINSON. It is a resolution asking that there be sent to the Senate copies of correspondence between Secretary Ickes and Comptroller General McCarl wherein there was a dispute with reference to the right of purchase of automobiles and general expenditures under the Public Works Administration. The President issued an Executive order, as I understand, annulling the decision of Comptroller General McCarl. I think we should have copies of those records, so that we may determine whether or not such expenditures are rightfully within the control of the Executive.

Mr. McKELLAR. Ought not the resolution go to a committee? I can see no particular objection to it.

Mr. DICKINSON. I see no reason why it should go to a committee. The correspondence constitutes a public record. One can go to the Department and look at such records; it is public correspondence, and such resolutions have never before gone to a committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator bring up the resolution a little later and in the meantime let me make some inquiry about it?

Mr. DICKINSON. My understanding is that if we do not get it up today it will be barred.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, I do not want to bar the Senator from consideration of the resolution.

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not see what possible objection there can be to the resolution.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S.Res. 217) submitted by Mr. DICKINSON on the 4th instant, as follows:

Whereas under date of April 4, 1934, an Executive order was made overruling the decision of Comptroller General J. R. McCarl, wherein the Secretary of the Interior, Harold Ickes, was denied the right to purchase passenger-carrying vehicles out of emergency recovery funds under the National Recovery Act; and

Whereas it is of public interest to know whether the National Recovery Act supersedes other statutes controlling Federal expenditures: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes and Comptroller General J. R. McCarl be requested to furnish the Senate with all correspondence, contracts, and memoranda in connection with such transactions, together with a copy of the Executive order made in connection therewith.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is this a resolution coming over from a previous day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not; it will have to be considered by unanimous consent or on motion.

Mr. BORAH. If it is going to lead to any debate whatever, I shall object.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, if it leads to any debate, I shall withdraw it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to suggest to the Senator that he allow the resolution to go over today, and I will look into it right away and let him know.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will go over.

THE CALENDAR—BILLS PASSED OVER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar, under rule VIII, is in order.

The bill (S. 882) to provide for the more effective supervision of foreign commercial transactions, and for other purposes, was announced as first in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 506) conferring upon the President the power to reduce subsidies, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 583) relating to the classified civil service was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 316) relative to the qualifications of practitioners of law in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Utah is not present at the moment, and I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 867) to define, regulate, and license real-estate brokers and real-estate salesmen; to create a real-estate commission in the District of Columbia; to protect the public against fraud in real-estate transactions, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the same order be entered in the case of that bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILL INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

The bill (S. 2652) to include peanuts as a basic agriculture commodity under the Agricultural Adjustment Act was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, action on that bill in connection with another measure was taken sometime ago, and I think it should be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill is indefinitely postponed.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S.J.Res. 29) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the popular election of President and Vice President of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suppose that is too important a matter to be heard on the call of the calendar, and I, therefore, ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

UNCLAIMED DEPOSITS IN NATIONAL BANKS

The bill (S. 2359) to provide for the disposition of unclaimed deposits in national banks was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, does not that bill provide for the disposition of unclaimed moneys now in the Treasury?

Mr. REED. No; the bill does not provide for the Government's retaining in the Treasury money now unclaimed; it provides that all unclaimed deposits in national banks throughout the country shall be paid into the National Treasury, and, in effect, it provides a system of national escheat and takes away from the States the power of escheat which they now have. It is a very serious attack on the individual States. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2500) to aid in relieving the existing national emergency through the free distribution to the needy of cotton and cotton products was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the author of the bill, is not present at the moment, so I will ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LOSSES INCIDENT TO ERADICATION OF MEDITERRANEAN FRUIT FLY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1800) to provide for an investigation and report of losses resulting from the campaign for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruit fly by the Department of Agriculture, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I have been objecting to this bill. I have been waiting for the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] in order that I might suggest two amendments to it. I do not want to be alone responsible for indefinitely postponing the consideration of the bill. Will the senior Senator from Florida feel entitled to speak for his colleague in respect to one or two amendments?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think I may do that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The first amendment I desire to suggest is to reduce the sum available for the proposed investigation from $20,000 to $10,000 because of the fact that the bill only carried $10,000 when it was passed by the Senate on March 14, 1932. Would the Senator object to such an amendment?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will make no objection to it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then I move to amend in line 11, page 3, by striking out "$20,000" and inserting "$10,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the other objection is more fundamental. This bill, if enacted, in its implication, and in spite of the report of the committee to the contrary, may set a precedent for the collection of damages against this Government when the Government has entered upon an agricultural relief program or an agricultural curative program.

No appropriations were made for damages in the case of the eradication of the corn borer, for example, and there has never been any reimbursement when it was undertaken to check the depredations of the pine beetle and the white-pine blister rust, with resultant damage to great areas of forests. I am perfectly willing to have the information called for by the bill collected so long as it is definitely certain that we are not committing the Government to the recognition of any claim. Therefore I move, on page 2, in line 12, to strike out the words "make finding upon such" and in line 15 to strike out the words "and finding", so that all that will result from the bill will be the collection of information. Does the Senator object to that?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think such amendments would very largely defeat the purpose of the bill. The object of the bill is to ascertain exactly what damage came about by reason of the work of the Government itself. The Government, of course, performed a great service down there, but in prosecuting the work it had to employ many people who were green and inexperienced, who did things which it was unnecessary to do and caused damage thereby.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The fact remains that we cannot determine what claims should be acknowledged except as we first have a rule which sets up the principle of liability. I am objecting to setting up any principle of liability at least until the information is at hand. If the Senator wants the bill to provide that full information may be obtained, I have no objection; but I shall have to object to the present determination of the principle, to wit, that we are responsible in damages to anybody in Florida for work done by the Government in respect to the Mediterranean fruit fly.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator does not deny that if subsequent information justifies it the damage should be paid?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I deny at present any acknowledgment of liability. I am perfectly willing to have the information developed to prove liability, if any there be.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would rather have the bill passed in the form suggested than not to have it passed at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 2, line 12, to strike out the words "make finding upon such", and in line 15, to strike out the words "and finding."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments are agreed to. There are certain amendments of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry which will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 14, to strike out "1933" and to insert "1934", and in line 18, to strike out "1934" and to insert "1935", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That a board is hereby created, to be known as the Mediterranean Fruit Fly Board, to be composed of 5 individuals to be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture, 2 of whom shall be representatives of the Department of Agriculture (1 to be chairman of the board), 2 citizens of the State of Florida, and 1 man at large. Any vacancy occurring in the board shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. Each member of the board, other than members holding office under the State or Federal Government, shall receive compensation at the rate of $10 per day while actually employed on the business of the board. The board shall cease to exist upon transmitting its report under section 2 of this act.

SEC. 2. The board is authorized and directed to (1) conduct a complete investigation and survey of all losses sustained by growers and farmers in the State of Florida resulting from the campaign to eradicate the Mediterranean fruit fly in such State; (2) receive claims for such losses with such proof as the board may require; (3) report the facts and claims; and (4) transmit to the Secretary of Agriculture not later than December 31, 1934, a report of the survey and full data regarding losses and claims: Provided, That such report shall serve as information only and not be binding on the Secretary of Agriculture or Congress. The Secretary of Agriculture shall not later than January 10, 1935, transmit such report of survey to Congress, together with such recommendations as he may, in his judgment, deem advisable.

SEC. 3. The board may, with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, appoint and fix the compensation (without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations or to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended) of such employees as may be required, and may, with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, make such expenditures, including expenditures for travel and subsistence expenses, for personal services at the seat of government and elsewhere, and for printing and binding, as are necessary for the efficient execution of its functions under this act. All expenses of the board shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the board and the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 4. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR LEVEE RIGHTS-OF-WAY IN MISSISSIPPI VALLEY

The bill (S. 2796) to authorize payments for the purchase of, or to reimburse States or local levee districts for the cost of levee rights-of-way for flood-control work in the Mississippi Valley, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I move to substitute House bill 8018 for the Senate bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, has the House passed a similar bill?

Mr. OVERTON. The House has passed an exactly identical bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has it been reported to the Senate from the committee.

Mr. OVERTON. No; it has not been reported.

Mr. McKELLAR. Unless the bill has actually reached the Senate, it cannot be considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that House bill 8018 has just come over from the House. The bill has the same title as the Senate bill. Does the Senator from Louisiana desire to have the House bill substituted for the Senate bill?

Mr. OVERTON. That is my desire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H.R. 8018) to authorize payment for the purchase of, or to reimburse States or local levee districts for the cost of levee rights-of-way for flood-control work in the Mississippi Valley, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized, out of any money available for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes", approved May 15, 1928, to purchase from, or to reimburse States or local levee districts for the cost of, any levee rights-of-way or easements for the building of levees in the Mississippi Valley for which the United States was or is under obligation to pay under the provisions of the act of May 15, 1928, regardless of whether said States or local levee districts have furnished such rights-of-way in the past and regardless of the conditions under which such levee rights-of-way were furnished, or may be furnished in the future: Provided, That after careful investigation the prices are found to be reasonable: And provided further, That payments or reimbursements for levee rights-of-way or easements conveying the privilege of building levees may be made as soon as they have been acquired in conformity with local custom or legal procedure in such matters and to the satisfaction of the Chief of Engineers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 2796 will be indefinitely postponed.

SERVICE OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS AS ATTORNEYS

The bill (S. 2018) relative to Members of Congress acting as attorneys in matters where the United States has an interest, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, notwithstanding the objection I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a number of Senators are interested in the bill; and before we act on the motion of the Senator from Idaho, I desire to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Keyes	Pope
Ashurst	Davis	La Follette	Reed
Austin	Dickinson	Lewis	Reynolds
Bachman	Dieterich	Logan	Robinson, Ind.
Bailey	Dill	Lonergan	Russell
Bankhead	Duffy	Long	Schall
Barkley	Erickson	McCarran	Sheppard
Black	Fess	McGill	Shipstead
Bone	Fletcher	McKellar	Steiwer
Borah	Frazier	McNary	Stephens
Brown	Gibson	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Goldsborough	Murphy	Thompson
Bulow	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg
Capper	Harrison	Norris	Walcott
Caraway	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Clark	Hebert	Overton	White
Copeland	Johnson	Patterson

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to reannounce the absences and the reasons for such as previously announced by me this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BULKLEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who is necessarily absent. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], but I know that he would vote as I am about to vote, so I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FESS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. PATTERSON (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. I am not informed as to how he would vote. I therefore am compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. METCALF (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. WALCOTT (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. McADOO]. He is absent, and I do not know how he would vote if present. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. As he has not voted, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, on this question I wish to reannounce the absences I previously announced and the reasons for those absences, as previously stated.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

I also desire to announce the general pair of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING].

I wish further to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is detained at the White House.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]; and

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE].

The roll call resulted—yeas 31, nays 31, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. On this question the yeas are 31, the nays are 31. The Chair votes "yea", and lays the bill before the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2018) relative to Members of Congress acting as attorneys in matters where the United States has an interest, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 3, after the word "Delegate", to insert "in Congress", so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That no Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress, after his election and during his continuance in office, shall receive or agree to receive any compensation whatever, directly or indirectly, for any services rendered or to be rendered to any person, corporation, or association, either by himself or another—

And so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LONG. Is the Borah bill now up?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion just carried resulted in the Senate's taking up for consideration Senate bill 2018, which, perhaps, may be called the "Borah bill." The Senator from Idaho introduced it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. I do not wish to interfere with any other Senator who desires to speak. If the Senator from Pennsylvania wishes to address the Senate, I will yield to him.

Mr. REED. I desire to suggest an amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. LONG. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A committee amendment is pending. However, if the Senator from Pennsylvania desires to offer an amendment to the committee amendment, he may do so.

Mr. BORAH. I think the amendment which the Senator from Pennsylvania intends to offer does not relate to this amendment.

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President; I have no objection to the first committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 1, before the word "interested", to strike out "directly or indirectly", so as to read:

In relation to any proceeding, contract, claim, controversy, charge, accusation, or arrest, or other matter or thing in which the United States as a party is interested—

And so forth.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer to that committee amendment. I move to substitute the word "adversely" for the words "directly or indirectly."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, in lieu of the words proposed to be inserted by the committee amendment it is proposed to insert the word "adversely", so that, if amended, it will read:

In which the United States as a party is adversely interested.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just a word of explanation of my amendment.

I have no doubt that every other lawyer in Congress has had the same experience as I. I would not dream of taking a case in which the interests of my client were adverse to the interests of the United States; but I can see no reason in common sense or any other way why I should not take a case if the interests of the client are the same as those of the United States.

At the present time I am defending a former official of the Government who is being sued for damages on the allegation that he compelled the payment of a tax which was in fact invalid. This man was trying to enforce a Federal statute, asserting that the tax was valid, and trying to collect it. He is now being sued for that by one of the persons who paid the tax. His interests are absolutely identical with those of the Government of the United States. I do not see why a Member of the House of Representatives or a Member of the Senate should be prohibited from acting in a case of that kind.

I hope the Senator from Idaho will accept the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I object to this or any other amendment to the bill. To begin with, I do not think anyone in the Senate knew what he was voting on. I should like to have a copy of the bill. The vote was 31 to 31. I have asked a number of Senators about the matter, and they said they voted in such a hurry——

Mr. BORAH. I think the Vice President knew what he was voting on.

Mr. LONG. I do not know whether he did or not, but I assume he did. The point is that the Vice President did not have to vote. The vote was 31 to 31, and the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill would have been lost had the Vice President remained as innocuous as we generally have understood a Vice President could be. I am not willing to have the Vice President's knowledge assumed to be that of the rest of the Senate.

Mr. President, to begin with, if I might say a word, this is the only time the Senator from Idaho has ever put me over in the reactionary column. I believe I might appropriately start off the discussion of this bill by quoting a few lines I thought I had forgotten about King Solomon and King David. King Solomon, I believe, had five or six hundred wives, and King David had two or three hundred, and the poem ran something like this:

King David and King Solomon led merry, merry lives,
With many, many concubines, and many, many wives.
But when old age o'ertook them, with its many, many qualms,
King Solomon wrote the Proverbs, and King David wrote the Psalms.

[Laughter.]

There is no more able lawyer in the United States than is the Senator from Idaho. I read his speeches many years before I ever thought I would be recognized for any public office. His reputation as a lawyer went not only from one end of this country to the other, but I venture the assertion that two thirds of the barristers of the world have read some of the celebrated legal arguments made by the Senator from Idaho. Had this bill been a law in the days when he made those arguments, the world would have been deprived of a great deal of that legal oratory. We would not have had some of the celebrated defenses he has made.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator will permit me to make a correction in his statement of facts, none of those arguments was made since I became an active Member of the Senate.

Mr. LONG. I think the Senator made an argument in the Haywood case after he became a Member of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. No; not after I became a Member of the Senate.

Mr. LONG. Had not the Senator already been elected to the Senate?

Mr. BORAH. I had been elected, but I had not entered upon my duties as a Member of the Senate. I was employed in the Haywood case prior to the time I was elected, and I remained in it until it was closed.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, if the Senator from Louisiana will yield, I want to ask the Senator from Idaho whether he has not represented mining companies since he became a Senator?

Mr. BORAH. No; I have not.

Mr. DILL. The report has been that the Senator has.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to say that I have received no fee as an attorney since I entered upon my duties as a Senator of the United States. I closed up and finished the professional engagements pending at the time of my election. I have taken no new business. I have not since my work here accepted retainers of mining companies or any other companies or persons.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I congratulate the Senator from Idaho that he has not had to receive any fee since he came to the Senate.

The reason why I have not received any fees since I came to the Senate is that, with my limited time, I have not been able to get a client who had little enough intellect to employ me. I have tried, however.

The facts are these, that there are many celebrated men who have been Members of the United States Senate, who have not looked on this matter as the Senator from Idaho looks on it, who have rendered to the bar of this country as noble a service as could be rendered.

Let us bear this in mind. A lawyer pleading before a jury pleads before them without any influence of position. His title as a United States Senator is not worth the paper it is written on when he is before a jury. The fact is that it is against him if anything. He has absolutely no vote on the jury, nor has he any vote on the court. He is just the same simple, stripped-down lawyer that anyone else is.

If this bill shall be enacted—and I hope Senators will understand what I am saying—we might just as well write into the law a provision that a lawyer who is a Member of the Senate cannot practice law.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. That is clearly the intention of the bill, and I suggest to the Senator that it would be much more in keeping with honesty and much franker simply to pass a law providing that no Member of the Senate or of the House of Representatives should engage in the practice of the law.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope that is what the bill means, because that is exactly what I am in favor of. I do not think any Member of the United States Senate should be allowed to practice law.

Mr. LONG. Why not include a provision that no Member of the Senate could practice medicine? Why not include a provision that no Member of the Senate could raise cotton? Why not include a provision that no Member of the Senate could run a newspaper?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. The reason for that is that the raising of cotton does not place the man who raises it in position to influence United States Senators. No one need tell me that, when a Senator represents some great railroad company, and a question affecting that railroad company comes before the United States Senate, the railroad company, through its representatives, does not approach the Senator more as a client to a lawyer than as to a United States Senator representing the whole people. I sincerely believe that Senators ought not to be allowed to practice law, so I answer the Senator's question by saying that the analogy which he draws between raising cotton and practicing law is not very good.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BONE. The suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky leads me to propound an inquiry. I wonder whether a railroad company seeking a special privilege would be any less likely to come to me and ask for favors if I were not a lawyer than if I were an attorney. The thing that would induce that company seeking special privileges to come to me would be that I would have a vote in this body, not that I followed some particular profession.

I agree with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]. I am a poor man, and I know of no reason why the Senate should strike from my hands the right to make a living for my family in a legitimate activity. I know of no reason why a poor man should be excluded from this body and the instrument by which he lives be stricken from his hands.

Mr. LOGAN and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LONG. I yield first to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Washington asked me a question. I only wanted to respond to the Senator that, so far as money and property are concerned, I suspect I am the poorest man in the Senate. I am rich in a good many other respects which I think are worth while, and I do not care much about these other matters. But I would find some way of making a living without accepting fees from those who have business with the Congress of the United States or I would go home and resign and represent them as a private citizen.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield further?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BONE. May I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that the bill provides that no Member of Congress can take a case in which interstate commerce is involved? It might have no bearing whatever on legislation. I could not, as a lawyer, nor could a firm with which I was connected, be permitted to handle a case which even remotely touched interstate commerce; and I cannot see any connection between that and my duties here.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The bill would prohibit a United States Senator acting for corporations or associations or persons engaged in interstate commerce, it is true, and it was drawn in that way for the reason that matters of that kind are constantly coming before the Senate for consideration and legislation. I am simply prohibiting by the terms of this bill those professional relationships which relate to matters about which we may be called upon to legislate.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator will recall that on Saturday last we agreed to a conference report on a bill which declares that every man engaged in the growing of cotton is engaged in interstate commerce. Therefore under the pending bill it would be absolutely impossible to conceive of any sort of lawsuit a Senator or a Representative would be entitled to handle.

Mr. BORAH. I am aware of the fact that we passed a bill declaring in effect that every man engaged in the raising of cotton was engaged in interstate commerce, but every man in the Senate who knows anything about the Constitution of the United States knows that is not true, notwithstanding the fact that we passed the bill.

The simple question is whether it is wise to have attorneys who represent corporations about which we are to legislate and may legislate drawing fees from the corporations at the time when they are sitting in the Senate or the House.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. BONE addressed the Chair.

Mr. LONG. Just a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor, but yielded to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. LONG. I did yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this bill would not inhibit the practice of law, speaking of section 3, outside of those instances and cases where the matters involved might come before the Congress of the United States, such as matters relative to interstate commerce. It would not prohibit a Member of Congress practicing law in all other respects. It would simply prohibit his representing a railroad company, for instance; and will the Senator from Washington say that if he is drawing $20,000 a year from a railroad company he is qualified to sit in legislation which affects his client?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. Just a moment. I want to answer the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. Just a moment. The bill does not stop with prohibiting a Member of Congress from representing a railroad company. I never represented a corporation in my life to amount to much. I do not recall that I ever took many lawsuits for corporations in my life. Certainly none against a poor man. I am on the other side. I sue the railroads. I sue the corporations. I sometimes defend people in the United States courts charged with crime. I had a pretty good practice representing employees under the Federal Employees' Liability Act. Under this bill I could not represent any of them. I could not have represented a laborer who had a ground of suit against a railroad. If the Bankhead bill should be held to be constitutional—and it may be—I could not represent a cotton grower in an action against a cotton gin.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand the language of the bill, if a wholesale grocer doing business in Kentucky shipped a carload of goods through Louisiana, and those goods were damaged by the railroad company, a Member of the Senate could not represent the wholesale grocer and bring a suit against the railroad company and recover damages.

Mr. LONG. He could not.

Mr. BARKLEY. Such a matter could never come before the Senate or the House for a vote as a legislative question.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, illustrations can be given, but I ask this simple question of the Senator from Kentucky. If he were drawing a salary of $20,000 a year from a railroad company, would he feel that he was prepared, as a representative of the public, to sit in matters of legislation which would affect that railroad?

Mr. BARKLEY. I would not feel that I could, and I would not do it. If I represented a railroad company on any such retainer and were elected to the United States Senate, I would resign my attorneyship with the railroad company.

But I do not admit, if the Senator from Idaho will permit me to say so, that if I desired to represent a private industry or a private individual in bringing a suit against a railroad for damages either to his person or to his goods or to his business, I should be precluded from doing so simply because of my position as a Senator. The bringing of such suit is not a matter in which I could have any official concern.

I will say further to the Senator from Idaho that I have not practiced law since I have been a Member of the Congress of the United States—for nearly 21 years. I abandoned my practice and turned over to others all the cases I had when I came to Washington, and I have not taken a fee from anyone from that day until this. If, however, I desired to practice law during vacation back in my State of Kentucky, and I wanted to bring suit for any concern against a railroad company, or against anybody who is engaged in interstate commerce, or if I wanted to represent one firm that is engaged in interstate commerce in a suit against another concern engaged in interstate commerce, I could not do it under the language of the bill introduced by the Senator from Idaho. I do not see where there is any connection between engaging in such action and my official duties here in the Congress.

Mr. BORAH. It may be there is no connection between them, Mr. President, but I take it the Senator from Kentucky declined to continue in the practice of the law for a reason. He thought it inappropriate and improper.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not necessarily. That might have had something to do with it. I thought it inappropriate for me to be attempting to run back and forth between Washington and my home in Kentucky, and neglect my official duties here while undertaking to practice law on the outside. I did not regard it as having been inappropriate and improper otherwise.

Mr. BORAH. That presents another phase of this question which the bill in effect prevents. It would permit the Senator to devote his time to his public duties.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I wonder if the Senator from Idaho realizes how broad section 3 is.

Mr. BORAH. I ought to know something about it. I have been urging it for the last 11 years.

Mr. BONE. The Senator from Kentucky has suggested, and I think with propriety, a perfect case. A grocer is shipping sugar, we will say, from the State of Washington to Alaska. That grocer is engaged in interstate commerce. I might not even be retained, under the terms of the bill, if the grocer desired to retain me as an attorney for him, and I had time—which I do not—but if he desired to retain me I would be forbidden to take a case from a wholesale grocer in the city of Tacoma who shipped a carload of sugar into the Territory of Alaska. I cannot imagine by the widest stretch of imagination how such work could affect my duties here. I have not represented any corporations while here. I never have.

Mr. BORAH. None of us do, of course.

Mr. BONE. With that section out of the bill I think it a proper measure. I think it improper for Members of Congress to appear and practice before bureaus of the Government and Government departments.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, that is already prohibited by law. We have a law which prohibits a Congressman from appearing and practicing before bureaus or Government departments.

The point I am making is this: We have all the law in the world that I think is proper to pass. We have a law today that we cannot go before any department of the United States Government and represent a client for any compensation.

That is the present law. A Member of Congress cannot represent the diplomatic service of a foreign country without violating the law; but here is a bill, under the terms of which an effort is made to prevent a man from going before a court with which he has absolutely no affiliation, over which he has absolutely no control. We are not simply stopping a man from representing corporations. I might be willing under some circumstances to go before the people and oppose corporation lawyers who are running for office in order to try to defeat them for election if they represent corporations whose interests are opposed to those of the people. There are some places where the people do not think that is anything against a man. They would rather have a good railroad lawyer in the Senate than anybody else. That is not my view of the matter, though it may be the view of some people. Here, however, the proponents of the bill come before us and say, "A lawyer cannot be a lawyer when he gets into the United States Senate. He will have to quit his business as a lawyer."

The Senator from Idaho, who is also liberal, has another view of the matter where the two extremes will meet. My friend from Idaho wants to do more things. He wants to reduce the salaries of Senators, to start with. If we had not worked pretty hard, I do not think we would have gotten our salaries back to $9,500. The Senator from Idaho first would cut the salaries, and he would take his cut along with the rest. I honor him for taking that position. He would not even take the raise for awhile, I understand, after it was voted. If I had voted against it and it had been raised, you would not have seen me waiting around; I would have gone around to get it myself. I would not have been nearly as meticulous as my friend from Idaho was.

First, however, he wants to cut the salaries. That is no. 1.

Mr. BORAH. I am not advocating the reduction of salaries, except the reduction which should take place by reason of this depression. I thought it was proper for us to bear our proportion of the cut; that is all. I am not asking for a general reduction of salaries, as a permanent policy.

Mr. LONG. I know my friend has good motives and thinks we ought to take our part in fighting the depression. He first would cut down the salaries, and then he would raise the Senators' income tax, and prevent them from making a living anywhere else. What a man can do after he gets through legislating in the United States Senate, I do not know. If there is anything else left which he can do, I do not know what it is. There would be only two classes which could crawl into the United States Senate—a pauper or a rich man—if such legislation as this were passed. A man would have to be either the one or the other in order to get into the Senate.

I know and I propose a reasonable rule to apply to the Senate under present conditions. If it were left to me, I would raise the salaries of United States Senators to what they ought to have. I would pay them about what they could make or what they ought to be able to make on the outside. I would pay them what would be a reasonable living cost when they are in the Senate. I would pay them enough to enable them to pay the cost of making a political campaign instead of having to stand with their hats in hand out in front of St. Peter's Church to look for a dime here and there with which to buy stamps in order to mail out circulars to their constituents.

I would not give Senators a salary of $10,000 a year each. If it were left to me, I would pay them more than that so long as it cost that much to hold the office. I am not afraid to go back and tell the people of my State that I would be in favor of paying them a sufficient amount to pay the reasonable living costs of a Senator while in the Senate. I would be willing to tell them that the salaries of Senators ought to be double what they are at the present time; and, even if the salaries were doubled, Senators would not have enough to live on in Washington and pay for conducting their campaigns every 6 years.

Now, however, it is proposed to make us get out of the practice of law. I think Senators know that if a man is taken out of the practice of law for 15 or 20 years he is done for as a lawyer. If he does not keep some kind of a contact with somebody, and keep his contacts with the jurisprudence of the State and the United States, he is done for as a lawyer at the end of 10 or 15 years' time.

I do not think the average life of a United States Senator is 15 years. I think the average life of a United States Senator may be some 9 or 10 years. He gets into the Senate, and under this bill when he gets into the Senate he is to be prohibited from the practice of law; and then perhaps after awhile he is kicked out of the Senate by the people, and then he is not able to continue his law practice and is left with no place to go.

We cannot pass this bill except on the theory of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]; that is, we cannot pass it unless we look upon it just as the Senator does, when he said he would vote for the bill because he wishes to prevent Members of the Senate from practicing law.

Mr. BONE. At all.

Mr. LONG. At all; and that is the purport of the bill, whether the Senator from Idaho has written that into it or not. The purport of the bill is that we cannot practice law.

My friend from Idaho points out that lawyers deal with the Government. Then a man who has any interest at all in any bank would have the same reason for not sitting in the United States Senate, because the bank has to deal with the Government. Any man who borrows money from a bank should not be allowed to sit in the United States Senate, because his note is negotiated with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and the Federal Reserve bank; so he ought to be put out of business.

No man who has raised cotton ought to be allowed to sit in the United States Senate, because he is dealing directly with the United States Government. He is receiving a bounty on his cotton, a loan from the Government, and has marketed his crop through the United States Government, and with his connection he ought not to be allowed to be in the United States Senate either.

We should not let a man who is on the C.W.A. roll come to the United States Senate, because the Government has been feeding him, so he could not be a Member of the United States Senate.

If you will name me any man who has not a contact by which his private interest is affected, even though he be a Senator, I do not know who he is. Why not say that no Member of the United States Senate should recommend anybody for employment? Why not say that Members of the Senate ought not to be allowed to solicit jobs in Federal departments because of the fact that if they put their friends in jobs in Federal departments it is likely to affect their standing, it is likely to affect their viewpoint in voting on legislation? There is far more reason to do so than to say that a man in the United States Senate could not appear as counsel before a court.

I am sorry I am not going to be able to complete my argument on this matter before 2 o'clock. There are a great many things I desire to say. To begin with, I do not believe the bill should ever have been taken up. The Senator from Idaho says he has been drawing it for 11 years. I do not present the case as concretely as my friend from Washington

[Mr. BONE] presents it; but I say that a man who is in the United States Senate, and who owes anything, certainly knows that he is not going to be able to pay it if he is prohibited from pursuing his profession as a lawyer. It is too late for most of us to engage in any other kind of profession; and those of us who do not represent corporations, who never have represented corporations, who represented little men who sued railroads, who sued electric-light companies, who sued steamboat companies, who brought suits against the big oil and transportation companies, those of us who represented the common, ordinary man, drawing a small fee, who hoped some day that we would be able to come back and have time enough to represent some of them to make enough fees to help us pay the deficits steadily growing by reason of the expenses of a United States Senator being above the amount of money he gets in the office, certainly do not want to be hamstrung, Mr. President, at such a time as this, by a bill which is going to prohibit us from engaging in a vocation which we have trained ourselves all our lifetime to pursue.

I think Senators make enough sacrifices when they come to Washington to sit in the United States Senate. I have had lots of jobs, but this is the sorriest one I have ever had. I had a job as a farmer, and when I left the farm I said I did not want to go back to it, and I thought I would never have a job as hard as that. Then I used to set type by lamplight, sometimes being up until 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning, standing on my feet most of the time, and I thought that was a pretty poor job. Then I had a job as a drummer driving a surrey behind a pair of "broom-tailed" ponies, or riding the "jerk-water" trains at night; but the sorriest job I ever had has been in the United States Senate, Mr. President [laughter]; and now they are going to come along and take away the one and only chance a man has got to pay himself out of debt while he sits here.

RELIEF OF DEBTORS IN BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H.R. 5884) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, after conference with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3170, known as the air-mail bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3170?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] is in charge of the unfinished business.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and he has asked that what I have suggested be done.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

Mr. McNARY obtained the floor.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

Mr. McNARY. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I do not like to interpose an objection to the unanimous consent request of the Senator from Tennessee, but, in view of the condition of the hearings going on, and in view of legislation in the making of which the Senator has some knowledge, I cannot at this time consent, and therefore object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

THE AIR MAIL

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3170) to revise air-mail laws.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is that motion subject to debate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is subject to debate.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President——

Mr. McNARY. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not intend to debate this question, but I do wish to call the attention of the Senate to the pending situation. The most recent event which has come to my notice came through the agency of the press, which indicated that the President had made a suggestion to certain Senators with respect to air-mail legislation and to a fundamental study to be made covering the whole field of aeronautics.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that the President's suggestion is that two amendments be made, one reducing the time of the contracts from 3 years to 1 year and the other providing for the establishment of a commission to consider the general subject of the air mail. These two amendments will be offered later on in the progress of the consideration of the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, of course, we cannot foretell, we cannot even imagine, what the terms of those amendments will be, and perhaps they have not as yet been agreed upon; but until there shall be some indication that this procedure will not be used merely as a means of consolidating the cancelation of the air-mail contracts and foreclosing a proper consideration of the causes which led up to that event, I must urge upon the Senate not to proceed to the consideration of any permanent legislation on this subject.

I am rather inclined to believe that the President's suggestion is a very wise one with respect to permanent air-mail legislation; I am not intending to commit myself to it in advance, of course; but I say this much in order to reveal to my colleagues my disposition to go along and work toward any constructive legislation that will save the institution of aeronautics for our people. I do not think it would be wise for us to proceed with the measure which is referred to by the Senator from Tennessee until we shall have some definite idea of the matter to which we are going to address our real consideration. For that reason I hope the Senate will not vote to make Senate bill 3170 the pending business at this time.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, while in many things I do not concur with the learned Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who is my colleague on the special committee, on this particular matter I do concur with him, and there are reasons for my position. There is legislation now in the making here in connection with which Senators are giving their time and their energy to a study of a matter which is of Nation-wide interest and which in its far-flung effects should have careful consideration. Pending before one of the standing committees of this body and receiving its consideration is another measure on this subject, and now to try to crowd forward a measure that so greatly affects our national life seems to me to be untimely.

I respectfully say, Mr. President, that at this time the bill referred to by the Senator from Tennessee should not be forced forward, but further opportunity should be afforded in order that we may give the best thought we have to measures now pending which may take the place of or be consolidated or amalgamated with the thoughts incorporated in the bill which the Senator from Tennessee represents. Therefore, in view of the facts stated, and the further fact that the special committee on ocean- and air-mail subsidies have been sitting all morning and have witnesses now before them ready to go on, I say that legislation of this kind should be postponed until all the facts shall be brought out and until we may have knowledge of the entire condition. We should not have forced down our throats a measure that comes from some particular governmental agency. I do not care what that agency may be; I do not care what department may have drafted the measure, but I ask the Senate to vote making Senate bill 3170 a special order or the unfinished business.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I concur without reservation in what has been said by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] as to the undesirability of proceeding at this time with this proposed legislation. The Senate of the United States by formal resolution authorized the appointment of a committee to study the problem of the ocean- and air-mail contracts and all facts bearing upon such contracts then in existence. That committee has been diligent in its efforts; its work has not as yet been concluded. There have been no conferences among members of the committee so far as my knowledge goes as to the conclusions which should be arrived at; I take it that no member of the committee is at this time able to state with definiteness and finality what any other member of the committee believes as to proper legislation on this subject.

It seems to me to be a reflection upon the committee while it is still engaged upon this work to bring in here proposed legislation on the subject and to force its consideration. I think legislation of this character should be postponed until the committee shall have concluded its work and until the committee shall have made its recommendations to the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I dislike very much to disagree with my friend from Nevada, who is a member of the special committee, as to the advisability of considering this proposed legislation at this time. Insofar as waiting until the committee shall have completed its investigation is concerned, it is my judgment that it will be impossible for the committee to complete its investigations for some months. We have not as yet gone in detail into the financial aspects of the companies, and we cannot do so before the Senate, in the ordinary course of events, shall adjourn.

The bill which is proposed anticipates a broader study than that in which the present Senate committee has engaged and perhaps a broader study than it has the power to undertake. It anticipates and provides for a thorough investigation of Army and Navy aeronautics, and, indeed, all branches of aeronautics in the Nation. It is my belief that we should proceed to enact legislation at this time to the extent which this bill proposes.

I do not consider it to be at all a reflection upon the committee, nor do I believe that there is any justification for the idea that it is a reflection upon the committee; on the contrary, I consider conditions to be such that it is essential at the present time that legislation be enacted, and I sincerely hope that the motion to proceed with the consideration of the bill will be adopted.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. I wish to ask the Senator about another phase of the subject, and that is the possibility of getting some copies of the hearings that have been conducted. I understand the copies which were printed are exhausted.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DILL. I have been unable to get a copy of any kind. I inquired this morning of the printing clerk, and was told there is a resolution pending to print 1,500 more copies.

Mr. BLACK. There is such a resolution which, as I understand, has been adopted by the Senate. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] is familiar with it.

Mr. DILL. It must come back to the Senate because of some change to be made. The point I am making is that there is no use adopting a resolution which will give us 1,500 additional copies if they are going to be distributed to a few organizations as the other copies were. I suggest to the Senator that there be a provision incorporated in the resolution that the additional 1,500 copies shall be distributed to Senators who have constituents who would like to get copies.

Mr. BLACK. That is the way the others were distributed in the main. Letters from Senators and Congressmen reached the committee, requesting that copies be sent to their constituents, and they were sent in accordance with those requests so long as copies were available, the first to make the request being first supplied.

Mr. DILL. There is no use to complain about what has been done. I am talking about the future. If the copies heretofore printed were distributed to Senators' offices, no copy came to my office, and I know other Senators who received no copy. I am not now complaining about that, but I am asking that if we are to print further copies of the hearings, there shall be some allocation of copies to each Senator so we will have an opportunity to secure at least one for each Senator's own use and some for his constituents, who are certainly entitled to them.

Mr. BLACK. So far as I am concerned, I shall be very glad to listen to any suggestion of that kind. I have not personally attended at all to the distribution of the copies of the hearings, but they have been sent out upon requests received. I agree with the Senator from Washington that if Senators want copies sent to their offices, that should be done. It can be very easily done.

Mr. DILL. I want more than that. If we have to have a concurrent resolution adopted to order the printing of extra copies, I see no reason why such extra copies should not be distributed in the regular way by having allocated to each Senator a certain number of the printed copies. The other printed copies have been distributed en masse, but the additional copies should be distributed to the various Senators.

Mr. BLACK. I do not know what the rule is. It may be there is a rule of the Senate with reference to distribution, which, of course, should be observed.

Mr. DILL. The resolution should have incorporated in it a provision, as resolutions often do, which provide for printing of extra copies, that those copies shall be distributed in equal number among the Senators.

Mr. BLACK. I shall be very glad indeed to have it done that way in order to relieve the clerks of the trouble of sending them out to the various individuals who request them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.
Ashurst	Cutting	King	Reynolds
Austin	Davis	La Follette	Russell
Bachman	Dickinson	Lewis	Schall
Bankhead	Dieterich	Logan	Sheppard
Barkley	Dill	Lonergan	Shipstead
Black	Duffy	Long	Steiwer
Bone	Erickson	McCarran	Stephens
Borah	Fess	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Fletcher	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Bulkley	Frazier	McNary	Thompson
Bulow	George	Metcalf	Townsend
Byrd	Gibson	Murphy	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Goldsborough	Neely	Van Nuys
Capper	Gore	Norris	Wagner
Caraway	Hale	O'Mahoney	Walcott
Connally	Harrison	Overton	Walsh
Coolidge	Hayden	Patterson	White
Copeland	Hebert	Pope
Costigan	Johnson	Reed

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to reannounce the absences and the reasons for such, as previously announced by me this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DILL in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. On that motion the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I desire to offer a substitute for the motion of the Senator from Tennessee. I move, as a substitute, that instead of taking up Senate bill 3170 the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill no. 1, the bonus bill, and that the committee be discharged from its further consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee will state it.

Mr. McKELLAR. That motion is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained. The motion is out of order. The clerk will call the roll on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3170.

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, I desire to state that the motion of the Senator from Tennessee is in keeping with the agreement made with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], who is a very active member of the subcommittee having in charge the corporation reorganization bill, which is the unfinished business. The Senator from Delaware is out of the city and will not be back until tomorrow. My agreement with him, as chairman of the subcommittee that had charge of the measure, was that the consideration of the bill should be temporarily postponed until his return.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I did not hear the statement of the Senator from Indiana. The unfinished business is the bill reported by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. VAN NUYS. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. I have been told on the floor that the Senator is not ready to proceed with it today, but that he will be ready to proceed with it later in the week.

Mr. VAN NUYS. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that his statement is correct.

Mr. McNARY. When does the Senator expect to be ready to proceed with the consideration of the bill?

Mr. VAN NUYS. I should think by day after tomorrow, at least.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3170. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. METCALF (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON.] I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WALCOTT (when his name was called). The junior Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], with whom I have a general pair, is absent from the Chamber, so I shall have to refrain from voting. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BULKLEY. In the absence of the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], with whom I have a pair, I withhold my vote. I understand that if present he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HEBERT (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]. In his absence, and not knowing how he would vote, I am obliged to withdraw my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

I desire to announce a pair between the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and a pair between the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

The Senators from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN and Mr. BARBOUR] are detained on an important matter; and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] are necessarily absent. All these Senators, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is necessarily detained from the Senate in attendance upon a conference at the White House.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

I desire to repeat the announcement heretofore made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] as to the absences of various Senators, and the reasons therefor.

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—48

So Mr. McKELLAR's motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3170) to revise the air-mail laws, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think it is fair for me to make an announcement at this time, before the Senator from Tennessee proceeds with his discussion, that I have the intention of preparing immediately an amendment to be offered in the nature of a substitute for the pending bill, intended to restore the status quo before the cancelation of the air-mail contracts, pending an investigation by such a commission as we understand the President has suggested, and also providing for the appointment by the President of such a commission to make a broad examination of the subject and report at the next session of the Congress if possible.

I give the notice now, in order that the Senator from Tennessee may understand that that is our position.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] asks that the bill be read, and I will ask the clerk to read it in my time. I hope we may have order while the bill is being read. It is a very important measure, and I am sure all Senators will take the same view about it the Senator from Michigan entertains.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the act of April 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 259, 260; U.S.C., supp. VII, title 39, secs. 464, 465c, 465d, and 465f) and the sections amended thereby are hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. The term "person", as used herein, is defined so as to include within its meaning all persons, firms, partnerships, corporations, or associations.

SEC. 3. The Postmaster General is authorized to award contracts for the transportation of air mail by airplane between such points as he may designate, and for periods of not exceeding 3 years, to the lowest responsible bidders tendering sufficient guaranty for faithful performance in accordance with the terms of the advertisement at fixed rates per airplane-mile, with a definite weight basis of 1 cubic foot of space being considered as the equivalent of 10 pounds of air mail: Provided, That where the Postmaster General holds that a low bidder is not responsible, such bidder shall have the right to appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission under rules and regulations to be established by the said Commission, which shall speedily determine the issue, and its decision shall be final: Provided further, That the base rate of pay which may be bid and accepted in awarding such contracts shall in no case exceed 30 cents per airplane-mile for transporting a mail load not exceeding 300 pounds. Payment for transportation shall be at the base rate fixed in the contract for the first 300 pounds of mail or fraction thereof plus one tenth of such base rate for each additional 100 pounds of mail or fraction thereof, computed at the end of each calendar month on the basis of the average mail load carried per mile over the route during such month, except that in no case shall payment exceed 40 cents per airplane-mile: Provided further, That no contract or interest therein shall be sold, assigned, or transferred by the person to whom such contract is given, to any other person without the approval of the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission; and upon any such transfer without such approval, the original contract, as well as such transfer, shall become null and void: Provided further, That, if, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, the public interest requires it, he may grant an extension of any route, for a distance not in excess of 100 miles, and only one such extension shall be granted to any one person, and the rate of pay for such extension shall not be in excess of the contract rate on that route: Provided further, That the Postmaster General may designate certain routes as primary and secondary routes and may include at least four transcontinental routes, extending to termini, as nearly as practicable, on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, as primary routes. All other routes shall be secondary routes. The character of the designation of such routes shall be published in the advertisements for bids, which bids may be asked for in whole or in part of such routes.

SEC. 4. The Postmaster General shall cause advertisements of air-mail routes to be conspicuously posted at each such post office that is a terminus of the route named in such advertisement, for at least 30 days, and a notice thereof shall be published at least once a week for 4 consecutive weeks in some daily newspaper of general circulation published in the cities that are the termini for the route before the time of the opening of bids.

SEC. 5. After the bids are opened, the Postmaster General may grant to a successful bidder a period of not more than 6 months from the date of award of the contract to take the steps necessary to qualify for mail services under the terms of this act: Provided, That, at the time of the award, the successful bidder executes an adequate bond with sufficient surety guaranteeing and assuring that, within such period, said bidder will fully qualify under the act faithfully to execute and to carry out the terms of the contract: Provided further, That, if there is a failure so to qualify, the amount designated in the bond will be forfeited and paid to the United States of America.

SEC. 6. The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby empowered and directed to fix and determine, within 6 months prior to the expiration date of any and every contract made under this act, and at all events at a period not later than 4 years from the date of the passage of this act, the public convenience and necessity for all air-transport routes and the fair and reasonable future rates of compensation for the transportation of such mail matter by airplane common carriers and the service connected therewith, but not in excess of the rates herein provided for, prescribing the method or methods by weight or space, or both, or otherwise, for ascertaining such rates or compensation, and to publish the same, and orders so made and published shall continue in force until changed by the Commission after due notice and hearing.

All provisions of section 5 of the act of July 28, 1916 (39 Stat. 412), relating to the procedure and administrative detail for the adjustment of rates for carriage of mail by railroads, shall be applicable to the adjustment rates for transportation of mail by airplane under this act so far as consistent with the provisions of this act.

In fixing and determining the fair and reasonable rates of compensation for such transportation of mail matter by airplane, the Commission shall not include in such rates, or provide in addition thereto, any compensation by way of subsidy or other similar payment.

SEC. 7. It shall be unlawful for any person, or any officer thereof, holding an air-mail contract, to buy, acquire, control, or own, directly or indirectly, any interest, evidenced by stock ownership or otherwise, in any other person, if such other person is engaged, directly or indirectly, in any phase of the aviation industry.

It shall be unlawful for any person, or any officer thereof, engaged, directly or indirectly, in any phase of the aviation industry, to buy, acquire, control, or own, directly or indirectly, any interest, evidenced by stock ownership or otherwise, in any person holding a mail contract.

No person shall be eligible to bid for or hold an air-mail contract if when operations are begun under the contract, or thereafter, it has an officer, or another, who has theretofore entered into any unlawful combination or conspiracy to prevent the making of any bid for carrying the mails by airplane, or which pays an officer, or another, as a salary, including any other compensation, either directly or indirectly, a sum in excess of $17,500 per annum for full-time service.

"Officer" as used in this section includes a director, trustee, or whoever may individually, or in connection with others, assist in the management of any person as defined in this act.

No person who violates any provision of this section shall be eligible to bid on or hold any air-mail contract.

The prohibitions expressed in this section shall apply to holding companies, air-mail transportation companies, including all such persons or companies as may be engaged in the manufacture or sale of airplanes, parts of airplanes, accessories, or other materials or articles, used in connection with air-mail transportation; and shall also apply to subsidiaries, associates, affiliates, or other persons controlled by interlocking stock ownership or otherwise: Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall be construed to prohibit any persons holding an air-mail contract, buying, leasing, or owning in whole or in part a landing field or equipment thereon.

SEC. 8. Any company alleging to hold a claim against the Government on account of any mail contract that may have heretofore been annulled, may prosecute such claim as it may have against the United States for the cancelation of such contract in the Court of Claims of the United States, provided that such suit be brought within one year from the date of the passage of this act; and any person not ineligible under the terms of this act who qualifies under the other requirements of this act, shall be eligible to contract for carrying air mail, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3950 of the Revised Statutes (act of June 8, 1872).

SEC. 9. Each person desiring to bid on air-mail contracts shall be required to furnish in its bid a list of all the stockholders holding more than 5 percent of its entire capital stock, and of its directors, and a statement covering the financial set-up, including a list of assets and liabilities; and in the case of a corporation, the original amount paid to such corporation for its stock, and whether paid in cash, and if not paid in cash, a statement for what such stock was issued. Such information and the financial responsibility of such bidder, as well as the bond offered, may be taken into consideration by the Postmaster General in determining the qualifications of the bidder.

SEC. 10. All persons holding air-mail contracts shall be required to keep their books, records, and accounts under such regulations as may be promulgated by the Postmaster General, and he is hereby authorized to examine and audit the books, records, and accounts of such contractors and to require a full financial report under such regulations as he may prescribe.

SEC. 11. Before the establishment and maintenance of an air-mail route the Postmaster General shall notify the Secretary of Commerce, who thereupon shall certify to the Postmaster General the character of equipment to be employed and maintained on each air-mail route. In making this determination the Secretary of Commerce, in his specifications furnished to the Postmaster General, shall determine only the speed, load capacity, and safety features and safety devices on airplanes to be used on the route, which said specifications shall be included in the advertisement for bids.

SEC. 12. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to prescribe the maximum flying hours of pilots on air-mail lines, and safe operation methods on such lines, and is further authorized to initiate and approve agreements between air-mail operating companies and their pilots for retirement benefits to such pilots and mechanics. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to prescribe all necessary regulations to carry out the provisions of this section and section 10 of this act.

SEC. 13. It shall be a condition upon the awarding and holding of any air-mail contract that the rate of compensation for all pilots, mechanics, and laborers employed by the holder of such contract shall be not less than the rate of compensation paid by air-mail-line operators during 1933, as modified by decisions of the National Labor Board. This section shall not be construed as restricting the right of collective bargaining on the part of any such employees.

SEC. 14. In order to improve national defense, promote the art of flying, and secure for air-mail and military and naval pilots the benefits of training in both military and commercial aviation, a committee of not more than seven members, consisting of representatives of the Postmaster General, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the air-mail contractors, and of the air-mail pilots, to be designated in such manner as the Postmaster General may determine, is authorized to provide for an interchange of personnel, so that air-mail pilots who hold commissions as Reserve officers in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps may be called into active service with their respective branches, and air pilots who are Regular or Reserve officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps may be detailed by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, for training in air-mail flying. Such interchange of personnel shall not operate to reduce the pay, emoluments, or privileges of any pilot of an air-mail contractor, except that any air-mail pilot who is a Reserve officer when called into active service under such interchange shall not be entitled to pay from the air-mail contractor during such active service.

SEC. 15. All commissioned officers who are detailed for training in air-mail flying shall receive from the United States the pay, including flying pay and other allowances, now authorized in accordance with their military or naval rank, and, while detailed to such duty, shall also be paid the same rate per diem as is now payable to civilian employees of the United States under the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, as amended. The performance by military or naval personnel of duty under this act shall in no way disturb or change their status under their respective commissions, warrants, or enlistments in their branches of the service, or any right, privilege, benefit, or responsibility growing out of such status.

SEC. 16. All persons holding air-mail contracts, and who may employ civilian pilots and/or copilots, who now hold, or who may hereafter hold, commissions in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps Reserve, shall, upon request of such pilots and/or copilots, grant them leave of absence but not during vacation, of not to exceed 1 month each year, when such pilots and/or copilots may be called to Government training duty with their respective branches of the service, under their respective commissions, for such period: Provided, That all reserve officers performing Government duty with their respective branches of the service shall be deemed to be in the Government military service, and, if injured or killed while on such active duty, such officer and/or his dependents and beneficiaries shall be entitled to the same benefits as in the case of officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps and/or their dependents and beneficiaries.

SEC. 17. The Federal Radio Commission shall give equal facilities in the allocation of radio frequencies to those airplanes carrying mail and/or passengers during the time the contract is in effect.

SEC. 18. It shall be unlawful for the contractor of any air-mail route to hold any other contract, or for air-mail contractors competing in parallel routes to merge or enter into any agreement, express or implied, which may result in common control or ownership.

SEC. 19. The Postmaster General may provide service to Canada within 150 miles of the international boundary line, over domestic routes which are now or may hereafter be established and may authorize the carrying of either foreign or domestic mail, or both, to and from any points on such routes and make payment for services over such routes out of the appropriation for the domestic Air Mail Service: Provided, That this section shall not be construed as repealing the authority given by the act of March 2, 1929 (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 39, sec. 465a).

SEC. 20. The Postmaster General may cause any contract to be canceled for disregard of or failure by the contractor to comply with the provisions of law herein contained and for any conspiracy or acts designed to defraud the United States with respect to such contracts. This provision is cumulative to other remedies now provided by law.

SEC. 21. Whoever shall enter into any combination to prevent the making of any bid for carrying the mail under this act, or shall make any agreement, or give or perform or promise to give or perform, any consideration whatever to induce any other person or concern not to bid for any contract pursuant to this act, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 22. Section 3 of the act of February 2, 1925 (43 Stat. 805), as amended (39 U.S.C., supp. VII, sec. 463), is amended so as to read as follows:

"Air-mail postage rates shall be 6 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof."

SEC. 23. If any person shall willfully or knowingly violate any provision of this act his contract, if one shall have been awarded to him, shall be forfeited, and such person shall upon conviction be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or be imprisoned for not more than 5 years.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have long been greatly interested in aviation and especially in the air mail. So long ago as May 1918 I offered in the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads an amendment which I am going to read, as it is very short. That amendment was proposed to the post-office appropriation bill of that year, and is as follows:

Provided, That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not exceeding $100,000 for the purchase, operation, and maintenance of aeroplanes for an experimental aeroplane mail service between such points as he may determine.

Mr. President, that amendment, as I have stated, was offered in the committee and was adopted, but when the bill reached the Senate the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] made a motion to strike it out. It was not stricken out, and that appropriation of $100,000 was the beginning of the Air Mail Service in this country.

There was established by the then Postmaster General a line from Washington to New York. That line proved to be quite a success. Of course the airplanes were not then particularly good; there was practically no airplane passenger service; but the mails were carried very regularly. I wonder if I might not quote briefly from a speech I made in the Senate at that time? The Senator from Utah, it will be remembered, had made a motion to strike out that amendment, on the ground, as he stated, that air navigation could never be made practicable. I quote from my speech on page 6208 of volume 56, part 6, of the RECORD of the Sixty-second Congress, second session, May 8, 1918, as follows:

Mr. MCKELLAR. I just want to call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who is the author of the amendment to strike out the airplane provision——

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield to me in order that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, having left the city to attend the funeral of the late Senator Blaine, of Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, when interrupted by the roll call, I was about to state that in 1918 in a debate here my distinguished friend and desk mate, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], argued the matter on the other side from me. I had introduced a bill to establish an air-mail line between Washington and the city of New York. The Senator from Utah opposed very strenuously that bill. I am going to read a short excerpt from what I said at the time and a brief excerpt from what the Senator from Utah said:

I just want to call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who is the author of the amendment to strike out the airplane provision, to the fact that objections of this kind have uniformly been made, and frequently by our ablest and most distinguished men, to new discoveries and inventions of this kind and to progressive measures generally. I think it was no less a person than Mr. Webster who, on the floor of this Senate, about 1830, said he would vote against any appropriation to be used for any purpose for the improvement of anything beyond the Mississippi River, on the ground that the great West was a desert waste and never could be used by this country. Now, we read the statements of the men who opposed those things in those days and we wonder how it was that with their great reputations they were men who did not have more perspective or insight into the future, to say the least; and in the years to come I have no doubt that the distinguished Senator from Utah will be referred to by others, just as I am referring to Mr. Webster now, in the very same way. I can say to the Senator that I believe that he is just standing across the path of progress.

Why, as young a man as I am, I remember distinctly when it was considered that the telephone was a toy and that it had no real use or advantage, and later on the automobile was considered a toy that would never be of any practical benefit; and yet the world could hardly get along today without telephones and automobiles. The telegraph, the ocean cable, the electric light, the electric motor, the moving picture, and numberless other improvements had the same history. And so it is with airships.

I have no doubt that the time will come when we will use them for a hundred different purposes, and that the world will feel that it could hardly get along without them.

I hope the Senator will not interpose an objection to this very worthy measure, as it seems to me. It may be that the money may not bring full results the first year or the second year or even the third year, but the time will come when results will be shown by reason of these experiments. Why, the time will come when we will use airplanes just as frequently as we now use automobiles, in my judgment, and there may be inventions in the future that will far surpass them. We cannot afford to take chances on it if we want to help develop things of this kind and make them the best for our country, and I hope the Senator will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee is assuming the role of a prophet today. It was stated by the great prophet of old that "without vision the people perish." Prophecy did not cease when Malachi, the last of the prophets of the Old Testament, gave his words to an unwilling world.

Then my distinguished friend the Senator from Utah a moment later said:

Great political leaders have looked with prophetic vision into the future, and the great statesman is the one who glimpses the mighty events which the future holds within her grasp. Poets, too, have been prophets, and they, like Tennyson—

* * * dipped into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be;
Saw the heavens filled with commerce, argosies of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales.

Mr. President, that was in 1918. If the Senator from Utah will recall, that debate was sent out by the newspapers all over the land in parallel columns. Fortunately, as I thought then and as I still think, the Senate decided in favor of making that appropriation for $100,000 to inaugurate only experimental air lines from Washington to the city of New York. The experiment was a success; and either next year or the second year thereafter the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads authorized an appropriation of a million dollars to establish a line from the city of New York to the city of San Francisco. That line was established by the Government at that time. So we went on down through the years, until there was a change of administration in 1921, when that line was turned over to a private company.

It was not long after the line was thus turned over that we began to give benefits to those engaged in the aircraft industry. In 1924 another measure was passed, adding some little subsidy as we went along. Then in 1928 the celebrated Watres Act was passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator has referred to what appears to me as a prophetic statement which I made in 1918, when I quoted from Tennyson, who, in a great poem, adverted to the fact that in the future there would be pilots of the azure blue who would drop their golden bales upon earth.

As I recall, I was not in favor of the particular amendment to which the Senator referred, though not because of opposition to aviation. Indeed, I predicted then, as the few remarks which the Senator has read indicate, the future use of this great instrumentality. I recall that during the war I advocated large appropriations, aggregating several hundred million dollars, for the construction of airplanes to be used in the great World War. And I offered a resolution, as I recall, in favor of establishing a Bureau of Aeronautics. It seemed to me then that airplanes were destined to constitute powerful and indispensable weapons of war as well as instrumentalities of commerce. I believed in the submarine, in the airplane, as essential to our military organizations, and offered a resolution, as I have indicated, calling for the organization of bureaus of aeronautics and submarines. The reactionary forces in the War and Navy Departments, however, were not favorable to the resolutions to which I have referred. I think the World War and subsequent events have demonstrated that important weapons of future wars will be the submarine upon the high seas and the airplane upon the sea as well as upon the land.

I was not favorable then, and I am not favorable now, to subsidies. The word "subsidies" has conveyed a rather unfavorable meaning to me. I believed that private capital would develop the airplane and make of it an instrumentality of commerce, as it has in this and other lands. If it were absolutely imperative, in order to develop the art of aviation, that we should subsidize it in a limited way, I think I should go that far; but I do not believe it to be necessary. I believe in the genius of the American. He has surmounted difficulties in almost every field of endeavor and has brought our country mechanically, industrially, and commercially to preeminence in the world. Give the American opportunity, leave him untrammeled, and he will achieve mighty results and bring countless blessings commercially, industrially, morally, and culturally to our Nation and its people.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, from that date in 1918 aviation has steadily grown.

On April 29, 1930, an act was approved by which it was provided that contracts for air-mail service would be let after public bidding. I read one section of that measure:

The Postmaster General is authorized to award contracts for the transportation of air mail by aircraft between such points as he may designate to the lowest responsible bidder at fixed rates per mile for definite weight spaces, 1 cubic foot of space being computed as the equivalent of 9 pounds of air mail, such rates not to exceed $1.25 per mile.

I shall not read any more of that act, but ask unanimous consent that the entire act may be printed here as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The act referred to is as follows:

[Public—No. 178—71st Congress]
H.R. 11704

An act to amend the Air Mail Act of February 2, 1925, as amended by the acts of June 3, 1926, and May 17, 1928, further to encourage commercial aviation

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the Air Mail Act of February 2, 1925, as amended by the act of June 3, 1926 (44 Stat. 692; U.S.C., supp. III, title 39, sec. 464), be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. The Postmaster General is authorized to award contracts for the transportation of air mail by aircraft between such points as he may designate to the lowest responsible bidder at fixed rates per mile for definite weight spaces, 1 cubic foot of space being computed as the equivalent of 9 pounds of air mail, such rates not to exceed $1.25 per mile: Provided, That where the air mail moving between the designated points does not exceed 25 cubic feet, or 225 pounds, per trip the Postmaster General may award to the lowest responsible bidder, who has owned and operated an air transportation service on a fixed daily schedule over a distance of not less than 250 miles and for a period of not less than 6 months prior to the advertisement for bids, a contract at a rate not to exceed 40 cents per mile for a weight space of 25 cubic feet, or 225 pounds. Whenever sufficient air mail is not available, first-class mail matter may be added to make up the maximum load specified in such contract."

SEC. 2. That section 6 of the act of May 17, 1928 (45 Stat. 594; U.S.C., supp. III, title 39, sec. 465c), be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. The Postmaster General may, if in his judgment the public interest will be promoted thereby, upon the surrender of any air-mail contract, issue in substitution therefor a route certificate for a period of not exceeding 10 years from the date service started under such contract to any contractor or subcontractor who has satisfactorily operated an air-mail route for a period of not less than 2 years, which certificate shall provide that the holder thereof shall have the right, so long as he complies with all rules, regulations, and orders that may be issued by the Postmaster General for meeting the needs of the Postal Service and adjusting mail operations to the advances in the art of flying and passenger transportation, to carry air mail over the route set out in the certificate or any modification thereof at rates of compensation to be fixed from time to time, at least annually, by the Postmaster General, and he shall publish in his annual report his reasons for the continuance or the modification of any rates: Provided, That such rates shall not exceed $1.25 per mile. Such certificate may be canceled at any time for willful neglect on the part of the holder to carry out any rules, regulations, or orders made for his guidance, notice of such intended cancelation to be given in writing by the Postmaster General and 45 days allowed the holder in which to show cause why the certificate should not be canceled."

SEC. 3. That after section 6 of the said act as amended, additional sections shall be added as follows:

"SEC. 7. The Postmaster General, when in his judgment the public interest will be promoted thereby, may make any extensions or consolidations of routes which are now or may hereafter be established.

"SEC. 8. That the Postmaster General in establishing routes for the transportation of mail by aircraft under this act may provide service to Canada within 150 miles of the international boundary line, over domestic routes which are now or may hereafter be established and may authorize the carrying of either foreign or domestic mail, or both, to and from any points on such routes and make payment for services over such routes out of the appropriation for the domestic air-mail service: Provided, That this section shall not be construed as repealing the authority given by the act of March 2, 1929, to contract for foreign air-mail service.

"SEC. 9. After July 1, 1931, the Postmaster General shall not enter into contracts for the transportation of air mail between points which have not theretofore had such service unless the contract air-mail appropriation proposed to be obligated therewith is sufficient to care for such contracts, and all other obligations against such appropriation, without incurring a deficiency therein."

Approved, April 29, 1930.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, that has remained the law until this time. Recent events caused a cancelation of the contracts that were entered into by the Post Office Department with the several bidders. At this time I shall content myself with an explanation of the various provisions of the pending bill.

This bill was prepared after most careful consideration by the committee, by representatives of the Post Office Department, by representatives of the Commerce Department, and by representatives of the Army. In addition to that the committee has taken 420 pages of testimony. Some of the witnesses who testified in favor of the pending bill are Clarence D. Chamberlain; Karl A. Crowley, Solicitor of the Post Office Department; Miss Amelia Earhart, vice president of the National Airways; William W. Howes, First Assistant Postmaster General; Gen. William Mitchell, one of the most distinguished aviators we had during the war and an expert on aviation; and Eugene L. Vidal, Director of Aeronautics of the Department of Commerce.

A number of other witnesses were called. Among these was Col. Charles A. Lindbergh. Colonel Lindbergh did not endorse all the provisions of the bill. He had a complaint about the cancelation of the contracts, but otherwise his testimony was exceedingly favorable to the bill. That was a major exception on his part. He thought the contracts ought not to have been canceled as they were; but, outside of that, he favored many of the leading provisions of the bill, as his testimony will show.

We had before us Mr. Edwin V. Rickenbacker, the noted American ace, who disagreed with the bill very generally. Mr. Rickenbacker was president of the North American Aviation Corporation, and, of course, it was very natural that he should not be in favor of the terms of the bill. The testimony of Miss Amelia Earhart, however, was most favorable.

Mr. William W. Howes, the First Assistant Postmaster General and for a long time in charge of aviation in the Post Office Department, made a most excellent witness. His testimony was clear, cogent, and forceful; and it was in a very large degree upon his testimony that this bill was predicated.

We had other witnesses before us. Clarence D. Chamberlain, one of the noted aces of the country, one of the noted explorers of the air, came before the committee, and was most favorable to the provisions of the bill.

There were a number of other witnesses. Representatives of almost all the old companies appeared before us. The committee tried to be absolutely fair, and to give them all a chance to be heard. They not only read their own views, but, as it seemed to me, they had very carefully prepared briefs; and the briefs of the representatives of the companies are in the hearings. In my judgment, there was an open, fair hearing of the entire matter.

Various members of the committee took various views at first, but when the bill was ordered reported the action was taken without a record vote in the committee. It is fair to say that there were two or three Senators on the committee who stated their desire to let it be known that they might vote against the bill, or they might offer amendments or substitutes for it. However, when the bill was reported, as I recall, there were no adverse votes at all, but simply statements of several members of the committee; and in that way the bill is now before the Senate.

I wish to call attention to some of the salient features of the bill. I have not a prepared speech on the measure, but I simply desire to consider briefly the various sections.

The first important section is section 3, which provides as follows:

The Postmaster General is authorized to award contracts for the transportation of air mail by airplane between such points as he may designate, and for periods of not exceeding 3 years, to the lowest responsible bidders tendering sufficient guaranty for faithful performance in accordance with the terms of the advertisement at fixed rates per airplane-mile, with a definite weight basis of 1 cubic foot of space being considered as the equivalent of 10 pounds of air mail:

Mr. President, that is substantially the present law. It provides merely that air-mail contracts may be let upon open competitive bidding. A change is made, however, in the life of the contracts. Their duration under the old law was 10 years. The length of time fixed here is 3 years, and I feel that I should say at this point that after conversation with the President, he felt that this provision ought to be limited to 1 year instead of 3 years; that the contracts should be let after public, competitive bidding for a period of 1 year. That is one of the two amendments which will be proposed later.

I next come to the first proviso:

Provided, That where the Postmaster General holds that a low bidder is not responsible, such bidder shall have the right to appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission under rules and regulations to be established by the said Commission, which shall speedily determine the issue, and its decision shall be final.

The purpose of that proviso is to give a bidder whose bid has been refused for any reason the right of appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission, there to have the questions concerning his bid, if any there may be, speedily settled. The action of the Interstate Commerce Commission is to be final.

That provision was inserted because we had found that on a previous occasion one bidder had bid $1.01 a mile, my recollection is, and another bidder had bid 62 cents a mile. There was a difference of 39 cents between the two bids. The Postmaster General accepted the highest bid, and the lowest bid was turned down. The committee thought that under circumstances such as that the low bidder should have a right to appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission, if he desired to do so, and that we should let the Interstate Commerce Commission settle the matter. That is the reason for that proviso.

I next come to the following:

Provided further, That the base rate of pay which may be bid and accepted in awarding such contracts shall in no case exceed 30 cents per airplane-mile for transporting a mail load not exceeding 300 pounds.

The testimony varied about the cost of transporting the mail. Some testified that mail could be carried for as low as 15 or 20 cents a mile, others 25 cents, but out of an abundance of caution, the committee thought that the maximum rate should be 30 cents a mile, with the provisions which will be referred to in a moment for larger loads.

As I recall, the general average under the old contracts was about 38 cents a mile in later months. So the committee fixed the rate at 30 cents a mile for a load of 300 pounds.

Then the following proviso was inserted:

Payment for transportation shall be at the base rate fixed in the contract for the first 300 pounds of mail or fraction thereof plus one tenth of such base rate for each additional 100 pounds of mail or fraction thereof, computed at the end of each calendar month on the basis of the average mail load carried per mile over the route during such month, except that in no case shall payment exceed 40 cents per airplane-mile.

Mr. President, that means that if 300 pounds are carried, an additional 100 pounds shall be carried at the rate of 3 cents a mile, if the bid was 30 cents a mile. The next 100 pounds shall be carried at the rate of 3 cents more, and the next 100 pounds at the rate of only 2 cents more, because 40 cents is the limit for any load. That is assuming that the contractor bid 30 cents a mile for 300 pounds. If he bid 20 cents a pound, then the figures would run up to a considerable height on the larger load.

The purpose is to encourage passenger-plane service with the mail service for the more thickly populated routes and the better routes. As we all know, the best route is from New York to Chicago. I take it that any contractor would be glad to get that route without the slightest suggestion of subsidy, because it pays well.

I proceed:

Provided further, That no contract or interest therein shall be sold, assigned, or transferred by the person to whom such contract is given to any other person without the approval of the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission; and upon any such transfer without such approval the original contract, as well as such transfer, shall become null and void.

The purpose of that proviso is to prevent speculation. Under the conditions heretofore existing many companies would get a contract or route certificate on a shoestring and at once proceed to transfer it to other companies and to create monopolies. The following provision was also added:

Provided further, That if, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, the public interest requires it, he may grant an extension of any route for a distance not in excess of 100 miles, and only one such extension shall be granted to any one person, and the rate of pay for such extension shall not be in excess of the contract rate on that route.

The purpose of that proviso is to prevent a company from getting a route, say, from here to Knoxville, Tenn., and then just continuing to extend that route until they get to Mexico City, for instance, or to Los Angeles, Calif., in this country. In other words, the committee thought that, in fairness, these contracts ought to be let after public bidding, and that extensions should not be allowed to the extent that has been indulged.

I now come to the last proviso in that section, which reads:

Provided further, That the Postmaster General may designate certain routes as primary and secondary routes and may include at least four transcontinental routes, extending to termini, as nearly as practicable, on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, as primary routes. All other routes shall be secondary routes. The character of the designation of such routes shall be published in the advertisements for bids, which bids may be asked for in whole or in part of such routes.

As Senators know, there are now three great transcontinental routes. This would permit another transcontinental route. The Senators from North Dakota, Montana, Idaho, and Washington have long contended that there should be a fourth transcontinental route, and that such a route is necessary. This would merely give the right to establish such a route.

Section 4 merely refers to the advertisement for air-mail routes, and it is along the lines of previous legislation.

Sction 5 has to do with the opening of the bids. I will read it:

SEC. 5. After the bids are opened, the Postmaster General may grant to a successful bidder a period of not more than 6 months from the date of award of the contract to take the steps necessary to qualify for mail services under the terms of this act.

That provision is inserted to enable a company which is well qualified but cannot instantly undertake the work, though submitting the lowest bid, which would mean a saving of money to the Government, to prepare for the work it has bid on.

Section 6 is an important section.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BYRD in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Does the Senator consider the procedure under section 5, which he has just read, and under which bids are permitted before the bidder is qualified, a safe one?

Mr. McKELLAR. The committee thought so. The bidder will have to give a bond, and the bond, as I understand, will have to be in quite a considerable sum, guaranteeing the carrying out of the contract; and no company will put up the amount of the bond unless it is in good faith intending to take over the contract.

Mr. FESS. Does this language mean that the contract may be let to a bidder who is not qualified, giving him 6 months' time in which to qualify?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; but there might be instances where a bidder of that kind would need some time in which to carry out his bid, and if the bidder were otherwise satisfactory and otherwise qualified, the section gives the Postmaster General a limited time in which to permit him to qualify.

Mr. FESS. The bond, which the Senator says gives that assurance to the Government, will not be issued until after the bid is passed upon?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; there is a bidder's bond filed before the contract is made, and then there is the bond guaranteeing that the terms of the contract will be carried out. There are two bonds provided for, one being a bidder's bond and the other a bond to carry out the contract.

I next come to section 6, which gives the Interstate Commerce Commission the power—

To fix and determine, within 6 months prior to the expiration date of any and every contract made under this act, and at all events at a period not later than 4 years from the date of the passage of this act, the public convenience and necessity for all air-transport routes and the fair and reasonable future rates of compensation for the transportation of such mail matter by airplane common carriers and the service connected therewith, but not in excess of the rates herein provided for, prescribing the method or methods by weight or space, or both, or otherwise, for ascertaining such rates or compensation, and to publish the same, and orders so made and published shall continue in force until changed by the Commission after due notice and hearing.

In other words, after the first contracts are let by open competitive bidding there is placed in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in which I think the people of the United States have confidence, the matter of the establishment of rates within the statutory limitations.

I next come to a section which, with the third section, I consider the most important section in this bill. I refer to section 7, on page 2. I desire to give the history of that section. It was drafted and redrafted probably half a dozen times. The committee tried its hand at the section, and several provisions were written and even agreed upon; and finally, when the bill came up for a vote before the committee, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], who is an ex-judge of the supreme court of that State, a very able lawyer, and a very gifted hand at distinguishing between legal terms and in the use of legal terms, asked if he might take the section home and redraft it along lines which he believed would carry out the purpose of the committee. That was done, and the next morning Senator LOGAN appeared before the committee and submitted this section. I read it:

SEC. 7. It shall be unlawful for any person, or any officer thereof—

A person meaning a corporation, as provided earlier in the bill—holding an air-mail contract, to buy, acquire, control, or own, directly or indirectly, any interest, evidenced by stock ownership or otherwise, in any other person—

Of course, meaning a corporation—

if such other person is engaged, directly or indirectly, in any phase of the aviation industry.

That was for the purpose of excluding holding companies. The situation heretofore, at times, has been that a company carrying the mail would belong to another company which manufactured the planes, the two in turn belonging to some other holding company which was purely a speculative company. The purpose of this section is to exclude holding companies; to separate the companies so that the company which actually obtains from the Government the contract to carry the mails will actually carry the mails.

I proceed further:

It shall be unlawful for any person, or any officer thereof, engaged, directly or indirectly, in any phase of the aviation industry, to buy, acquire, control, or own, directly or indirectly, any interest evidenced by stock ownership or otherwise, in any person holding a mail contract.

No person shall be eligible to bid for or hold an air-mail contract if when operations are begun under the contract, or thereafter, it has an officer, or another, who has theretofore entered into any unlawful combination or conspiracy to prevent the making of any bid for carrying the mails by airplane; or which pays an officer, or another, as a salary, including any other compensation, either directly or indirectly, a sum in excess of $17,500 per annum for full-time service.

That is a provision against unlawful combinations. What is its purpose? Its purpose is to prevent agreements not to bid, or to bid certain amounts, or to control bidding in any way, or to refrain from bidding on any contract. Its purpose is to have honesty of bidding, honesty of contracting, honesty of action on the part of those who contract with the Government.

We are not departing from the established policies of the Government when we put that provision in the bill. It is already, in a general way, in the law as to every other Department of the Government. Any combination to prevent bidding, or agreement that bids shall be made in a certain way concerning anything the Government now buys which is open to competitive bidding, is unlawful; and we simply make it unlawful with respect to airplanes, as it should be.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Would that limitation extend to the bidding of an aviation company which owns an airport, in an endeavor to obtain a contract for carrying mail?

Mr. McKELLAR. An amendment has already been agreed to by the committee excepting the ownership of airports in this particular matter. The amendment was agreed to by the committee, but through error it was left out of the bill by the draftsmen, and it will be offered later as a committee amendment.

Mr. FESS. I should think such an amendment would necessarily have to go in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; it will have to go in.

Mr. FESS. Let me ask as to another point. Would the section just read forbid an air transportation company which has a mail contract to establish a school for its own fliers?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; I do not think so. That is a part of carrying out the contract, and I do not think it would be prevented from conducting such a school by the language of this section.

Mr. FESS. That is a part of aviation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am just giving the Senator an offhand opinion. The subject has not heretofore been brought to my attention, but I am sure this provision would not prevent that.

I next come to the provision limiting the salaries of officers of the concerns. For years, Mr. President, the United States Government appropriated for air-mail service, in round numbers, about $20,000,000. My recollection is since about 1926 we have been appropriating for the carriage of air mail alone—not for the other expenses, but for payment to contractors—the enormous sum of about $20,000,000 a year. It was a great deal of money. It seemed to me then, and it seems to me now, that it was a willful waste of the people's money. It was a reckless extravagance on which the Government should never have embarked.

What did that expenditure bring about? It brought about the most reckless speculation. I saw in the newspapers not long ago a very interesting statement, and I afterward read it in the printed proceedings of the hearings before the special committee presided over by my distinguished friend the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], one of the ablest men in the Senate, a man who has done a great public service in his investigation of the air-mail industry.

Its tenor was that a man who had invested, my recollection is less than $100, certainly less than $500, in a year or two had profited to the extent of half a million dollars. In other words, the Government was putting into the hands of these contractors lavish sums of public money, and as in all such cases, as in the case of all subsidies which are granted, there was reckless extravagance in regard to expenditures and speculation became rife. Some of the salaries together with the prerequisites, bonuses, and fees far exceeded $100,000. One man who invested practically nothing—who went in on a shoestring—soon became an officer drawing scores of thousands of dollars; and where did he get the money? He got the money from the Government. Come easy, go easy. The Government was handing out the money.

The distinguished senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and myself fought that extravagance; and I must also include my friend, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. He was not on the Appropriations Committee, but whenever the opportunity afforded on the floor of the Senate, he joined us in fighting those extravagant appropriations. However, we could not do anything with them and, although there was the most strenuous opposition, they got through every time. The purpose of this provision is to prevent these concerns which obtain contracts from the Government paying out the Government's money in bonuses or in exorbitant salaries to officers, and so a limitation of $17,500 is fixed.

I next come to the provision—

No person who violates any provision of this section shall be eligible to bid on or hold any air-mail contract.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] has made that provision exceedingly strong, it is true, but in dealing with a case of this kind it is necessary to employ language that cannot be misunderstood.

The prohibitions expressed in this section shall apply to holding companies, air-mail transportation companies, including all such persons or companies as may be engaged in the manufacture or sale of airplanes, parts of airplanes, accessories, or other materials or articles, used in connection with air-mail transportation; and shall also apply to subsidiaries, associates, affiliates, or other persons controlled by interlocking stock ownership or otherwise: Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall be construed to prohibit any persons holding an air-mail contract, buying, leasing, or owning in whole or in part a landing field or equipment thereon.

Mr. President, the bill does contain the provision to which the Senator from Ohio just referred. It is found in the copy of the bill and is also included in the report. I call the Senator's attention to it. It will be found at the top of page 3, and reads:

Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall be construed to prohibit any persons holding an air-mail contract, buying, leasing, or owning in whole or in part a landing field or equipment thereon.

So that settles that, Mr. President.

Mr. FESS. What does the Senator construe the phrase "equipment thereon" to mean?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it would include everything that is ordinarily used in connection with a landing field.

Mr. FESS. Would it include shops for repairing engines?

Mr. McKELLAR. If they are on the airplane field, I should think it would.

However, Mr. President, the purpose of this section is to do equal and exact justice to all companies that may have contracts with the Government under competitive bidding. For instance, in the case of one of the big companies which holds a contract for an airline from New York to Los Angeles or San Francisco, under the bill such company, in order to bid on a contract will have to sell out its manufacturing plant; it will have to divest itself of all affiliates and holding companies. Who is to say that that is not wise? It should be done in the interest of good government, and, more than that, it should be done in the interest of building up a real aviation industry in this country. We shall never build up a real aviation industry until we provide for honesty and fair dealing and enact provisions with teeth in them to prevent 1 company or 3 companies or 4 companies monopolizing the whole airplane business.

I have heretofore read to the Senate and have referred to the debate that took place between the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and myself more than 15 years ago on this floor when the aircraft industry, especially the Air Mail Service, was in its infancy, when we did not have in operation a plane carrying the mail. We undertook to build up the Service by governmental assistance, and it ought to be done on terms of absolute fairness all the way along the line.

I next come to the provision that was not in the bill at the time but which, Colonel Lindbergh said, ought to be in the bill. I read it, as follows:

SEC. 8. Any company alleging to hold a claim against the Government on account of any mail contract that may have heretofore been annulled, may prosecute such claim as it may have against the United States for the cancelation of such contract in the Court of Claims of the United States, provided that such suit be brought within 1 year from the date of the passage of this act; and any person not ineligible under the terms of this act who qualifies under the other requirements of this act, shall be eligible to contract for carrying air mail, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3950 of the Revised Statutes (act of June 8, 1872).

What that means is simply this: The act of 1872 provides that where a contract with the Government has been canceled the contractor whose contract has been canceled cannot again bid within a period of 5 years. Any of the companies that may complain that a contract was canceled illegally, if they want to put it that way—and I do not believe that to be so, and I am not now going to go into that question; it is not necessary; I am merely explaining the terms of this bill and its purposes—any company that may feel aggrieved has a right to go into the court, and that is all that any company should ask under the circumstances.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BYRD in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does the bill of the Senator add anything to existing law so far as the right of these companies to go into the Court of Claims is concerned?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know whether it does or not; I think they have the right now to go into the Court of Claims; but it was objected by several of the witnesses that this bill did not make such provision, and so we have virtually given them an invitation to go into the court under the terms of the measure.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I think the Senator from Nevada asked a question that was in my mind, although I did not distinctly hear his question.

Mr. McCARRAN. I asked the Senator from Tennessee whether the proposed legislation added anything to the law as it now stands so far as the right to sue the Government is concerned, and the learned Senator from Tennessee said he did not know.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the companies have that right now; I thought so at the time; but representatives of the companies virtually insisted that they were debarred from the right to go into the court. Therefore, the committee met that situation by providing in terms specifically in this bill for their right to go into the court.

Mr. FESS. Does the Senator understand that this bill, without any additional authority from Congress, will permit a company or individual to sue the United States in the Court of Claims? This bill gives that right, does it?

Mr. McKELLAR. It gives that right; yes.

Mr. FESS. I hope it does.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to add to what my colleague from Nevada has said that, in my judgment, this bill does not confer any additional right, because none could be added and none is needed. By an act expressly, specifically, and pointedly it is provided that suit may be filed in the Court of Claims, but it is my understanding, as the Senator from Tennessee has stated, that this provision was placed in the bill by the committee because somebody had raised the question that the law did not so provide.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; not "somebody" but a number of witnesses and several members of the committee said that in the air bill the specific right should be accorded to the air-mail companies to go into the court, and we give them that right out of abundance of caution. I agree with the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Alabama that no additional right was needed, but, upon that insistence, realizing that it could not hurt anything, we incorporated in the bill the provision giving them the right to go into court.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the petition for an injunction in New York was denied on the ground that the only relief the air-mail companies had was to sue the Federal Government in the Court of Claims. What I am asking is, Does this bill include the authority to go into the Court of Claims without additional legislation?

Mr. McKELLAR. The proposed legislation is full, ample, and complete. Under its provisions any airplane company may take advantage of it. That is so, notwithstanding the provision in the existing law that a contractor whose contract has been canceled has no right to go into the court. That provision is found in section 3950 of the Revised Statutes, act of June 8, 1872.

On reflection I see that it does give an additional right in that, whether the contract has been canceled or not, any company feeling aggrieved may go into court.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, there is no law anywhere in existence which prevents a company going into the Court of Claims and filing suit. On the contrary, the statute explicitly and expressly authorizes anyone, if the Government breaches a contract, to go into court and file suit. The Senator is referring to a statute which provides that if any contractor enters into collusion with another contractor to prevent competitive bidding, he is barred from obtaining any further Government contract for a period of 5 years; but that does not stand in any way against his right to go into the Court of Claims and complain that his contract has been canceled. When he does that, if the Government sets up a defense of fraud it is the duty of the Government to prove fraud. Under that condition each of these companies has had the right since the day its contract was canceled to go into court and file suit.

Mr. McKELLAR. That may be a matter of legal discussion, but this provision would take it out of the realm of discussion and would make it absolutely certain that any company feeling aggrieved might go into the Court of Claims and seek redress.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BONE in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator will permit me, I think the statute of 1872 is quite different from this provision in that under that statute we do not cancel a contract without a hearing. The contracts in this instance were canceled without any hearing; so it does not stand on the same ground at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; the Senator is referring to a different statute. Without regard to any statute, whatever the grounds for cancelation, a contractor can go into court under this statute.

Mr. FESS. I am referring to the statute which I had printed in the RECORD the last time I addressed the Senate on this subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. I now come to section 9, which provides:

SEC. 9. Each person desiring to bid on air-mail contracts shall be required to furnish in its bid a list of all the stockholders holding more than 5 percent of its entire capital stock, and of its directors, and a statement covering the financial set-up, including a list of assets and liabilities; and in the case of a corporation, the original amount paid to such corporation for its stock, and whether paid in cash, and if not paid in cash, a statement for what such stock was issued. Such information and the financial responsibility of such bidder, as well as the bond offered, may be taken into consideration by the Postmaster General in determining the qualifications of the bidder.

That refers back to other sections, one as to the persons who may bid, and another as to the refusal of the Postmaster General to accept the lowest bid. Anyone aggrieved can appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission and the decision of that Commission shall be final.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I do not fully understand section 9.

Mr. McKELLAR. It seems to me its provisions are quite simple. It provides:

Each person desiring to bid on air-mail contracts shall be required to furnish in its bid a list of all the stockholders holding more than 5 percent of its entire capital stock, and of its directors, and a statement covering the financial set-up, including a list of assets and liabilities; and in the case of a corporation, the original amount paid to such corporation for its stock, and whether paid in cash, and if not paid in cash, a statement for what such stock was issued.

That is to say, the bidder may appeal, and the question is to be passed upon, under the provisions of this bill, first by the Postmaster General; and if there is discontent with his decision, an appeal may be had to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. FESS. Is it also to indicate whether the bidder is responsible?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the purpose.

I have just been furnished with section 3950 of the Revised Statute; and in order that there may be no mistake about it, I am going to read it at this time:

No contract for carrying the mails shall be made with any person who has entered, or proposed to enter, into any combination to prevent the making of any bids for carrying the mail, or who has made any agreement, or given or performed, or promised to give or perform, any consideration whatever to induce any other person not to bid for any such contract; and if any person so offending has a contract for carrying the mail, his contract may be annulled; and for the first offense the person so offending shall be disqualified to contract for carrying the mail for 5 years, and for the second offense shall be forever disqualified.

Mr. President, that concludes my discussion of section 9.

Section 10 provides merely for the keeping of records under regulations to be promulgated by the Postmaster General, and, of course, such a section should be in the bill.

Section 11 is rather important. It provides:

SEC. 11. Before the establishment and maintenance of an air-mail route the Postmaster General shall notify the Secretary of Commerce, who thereupon shall certify to the Postmaster General the character of equipment to be employed and maintained on each air-mail route. In making this determination the Secretary of Commerce, in his specifications furnished to the Postmaster General, shall determine only—the speed, load capacity, and safety features and safety devices on airplanes to be used on the route, which said specifications shall be included in the advertisement for bids.

This is the important part of it:

That is important for the purpose of insuring to the very last possible limit safety in flying. The Government should not enter into these contracts without taking every precaution for safety, and that is what is proposed by this section.

Section 12 provides that the Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to prescribe the maximum flying hours of pilots on air-mail lines, and safe operation methods on such lines, and is further authorized to initiate and approve agreements between air-mail operating companies and their pilots for retirement benefits to such pilots and mechanics. This is an important section. It has to do with pilots and mechanics, and it is a provision that ought to be in the law.

Sections 13 and 14 provide very largely—especially section 14—for the use under certain conditions of copilots from the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. I digress here long enough to say that this provision is especially important in view of the proposal of the President of the United States, as shown in the statement given out by him yesterday. Under an amendment to the bill to be later offered, a commission is to be established to study and report to the Congress and to the President upon the whole aviation problem. It is for the purpose of establishing a general policy. We have not had any policy for years. This is a great and important subject. We ought to have a real, genuine policy including every phase of the Air Mail Service.

Our President yesterday gave out a statement, which I desire to read at this point:

In conversation with Senators McKELLAR and BLACK and Congressman MEAD, the President suggested that in connection with pending aviation legislation it should be borne in mind that the United States has had no broad aviation policy; that a large number of interrelated factors enter into the general subjects of civilian and military flying and their subdivisions—material, personnel, manufacturing, and experimentation.

That in view of the latter and a need for a national policy, the Congress might well authorize the appointment of a commission to make immediate study and recommend to the next Congress a broad policy covering all phases of aviation and the relationship of governments thereto.

Insofar as that part of aviation which relates to carrying United States mails is concerned, contracts could well be let on competitive bidding for 1 year or until such time as a broad policy relating to aviation as a whole is adopted.

That is a very wise statement. It will be very wise to establish a commission of that kind for the purpose of passing upon the numerous questions arising with relation to aviation. More than 15 years ago I predicted that aviation was certain to become a great factor in transportation in this country and in all countries, and it is necessary for our Government to have a broad policy in reference to it.

Sections 14, 15, and 16 provide for the use of pilots and copilots, and for the use of officers of the Marine Corps and the Navy and the Army in connection therewith.

Section 17 provides that the Federal Radio Commission shall give equal facilities in the allocation of radio frequencies to those airplanes carrying mail and/or passengers during the time the contract is in effect. The purpose of that section is to see that the greatest safety is had in the carriage of the mails and of passengers. It is a wise provision; and we had before our committee the Chairman of the Federal Radio Commission, who testified that under this section the greatest precautions could be taken with reference to the carriage of mails and passengers.

Section 18 merely provides that contractors shall not have parallel routes, or enter into agreements, express or implied, which may result in common ownership or control.

Section 19 provides, as the present law does—it is merely a reproduction of the present law to a large extent—that branch lines may be operated into Canada. We have two such lines in Canada, and it may be necessary to continue them for not more than 150 miles; and we may want to operate a line of that kind to Mexico.

Section 20 merely provides that the Postmaster General may cause any contract to be canceled for disregard of or failure by the contractor to comply with the provisions of law contained in the bill, and for any conspiracy or acts designed to defraud the United States with respect to such contracts. This provision is cumulative to other remedies now provided by law.

I shall digress long enough here to say that it is very wise to incorporate in the law a provision of this kind. It has been provided in the law, since the Government first began contracting, that where a contract had been obtained by fraud, the official of the Government having charge of the contract had a right to cancel it. Mr. New, the Postmaster General under the Harding and Coolidge administrations, as I remember, exercised that right and canceled a contract while he was Postmaster General.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I do not read in section 20 any provision that conspiracy or fraud must be established before the contract may be canceled.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it is left to the executive officer in charge of the contract, as it has been in the Navy and other Departments. It has never been required that conspiracy or fraud must first be established.

Mr. FESS. Does the Senator mean that such contracts may be canceled without anything more than an allegation?

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course; that is so. If the Senator will recall, during the war Admiral Peoples and Admiral McGowan, in charge of the purchasing department of the United States Navy, time and again exercised the right of the Government to cancel contracts.

Section 21 merely provides a penalty.

Section 22 relates to the rate that shall be charged. It provides that the air-mail postage rate shall be 6 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof.

Mr. President, very frankly, I was not in favor of fixing the rate at 6 cents. The rate under the present law is 8 cents. It has been proposed to make the rate as low as 5 cents. I think those who use the air mail ought to pay for it. I think the rate ought to be continued at 8 cents. The committee outvoted me, however; and while my private views are as I have stated, I desire to say that I am for what the committee has reported and hope the bill will pass with that provision in it. It did not meet my judgment at the time; but it may be that my colleagues on the committee are much wiser men than am I, and that 6 cents will bring more revenue to the Government and be better for the people of this Nation than a higher rate. If so, it is all right.

The next section simply prescribes a penalty and nothing more.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator whether there was any evidence before his committee indicative of the possible profits that would be derived from a rate of 6 cents or 8 cents, or whether a subsidy would be required if 8 cents were charged as well as if 6 cents were charged.

Mr. McKELLAR. There was a difference of view about the rate. Some witnesses thought the revenue from a 6-cent rate would be greater than from an 8-cent rate, because the air mail would be more generally used under the lower rate, and not all the space in airplanes now provided in contracts is taken up anyway, and for that reason it was thought that the revenue would be greater under the lower rate. Others thought a rate of 8 cents would produce the greater income. There was a difference of opinion on the subject.

I desire to say in that connection that our present income from postage on air mail is about six and a half million dollars, in round figures.

Mr. KING. That is the gross revenue?

Mr. McKELLAR. The gross revenue from postage. Of course, from that gross revenue must be taken the normal and ordinary expenses. There was a good deal of difference of opinion about the amount, some witnesses claiming that there was as much as $7,000,000 of revenue; but there was no substantial proof that the total is more than six and a half million dollars, and that is gross, not net, revenue. On the other hand, last year we spent $14,000,000, and prior to that we had been spending in some years $20,000,000, in some years $19,000,000, in some years $21,000,000, and so on, just as much as the proponents of the appropriations could get. Sometimes, when the matter was in conference, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and several other members of the Appropriations Committee and myself, who were interested in it, had the amount cut down. We believe that if it had not been for the extravagant appropriations that were asked for and obtained, the condition of aviation in this country would be very different from what it now is.

Mr. President, I have gone over rather hastily, and in a more or less desultory way, the provisons of this bill.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. In just a second.

I am convinced that the enactment of the bill will bring about absolute honesty in the letting and management and control of air-mail contracts. I believe the limitations in the bill are wise. I believe they are in accord with what our experience shows they ought to be. I believe the enactment of the bill will mean the building up of aviation in this country as never before. I believe the course contemplated by the bill is best for the Government; I believe it is most economical for the Government; I think it is wisest for the companies which have been carrying the mail. I believe their wisest course will be to reorganize under the provisions of the bill and bid on the contracts; and when they do so, I believe they will be building themselves up in a better and stronger way than they have ever known before. To be sure, they will not have so much money with which to speculate. They will not have so much money to give out in bonuses and in great salaries to officials. They will not have so much money to expend lavishly, sometimes without regard to the proprieties, I am afraid; but under the terms of the bill they will have sufficient money to build up the great aviation industry as it ought to be built up; for I desire to say that, in my judgment, no great industry such as this one is, and will be, can successfully maintain itself, can prosper in this country, unless it is conducted on terms of honesty and integrity that are known of to all men.

The Government in its relation to its citizens ought to be generous, if you please, but at all times it ought to require absolute honesty in the use of the funds it contributes, whether in the way of subsidies or in any other way.

Mr. President, I am opposed to subsidies. I have always been opposed to them; and we should take the Air Mail Service out of that category as soon as possible. Wherever the Government gives subsidies, it thereby promotes graft and speculation. "Come easy, go easy" is just as true in the giving of governmental favors as it is in the giving of any other favors.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BONE in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator mentioned subsidies. I did not understand the Senator's answer to the question of the Senator from Utah in reference to what aid would be necessary. Does the bill carry a provision for subsidies?

Mr. McKELLAR. It all depends upon the contract. The testimony was to the effect that several of the routes, especially the transcontinental routes, were able now, as they have been, to maintain themselves. I think the statement of one of the companies was, "Give us the contract, and we do not want any subsidy. Just give us the returns from postal receipts." There are other contracts as to which there will have to be some help.

Mr. FESS. That is what I desire to inquire about. Is there any provision for that?

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill provides for honest, open, competitive bidding. It has been the policy of the Government for a century and a half to let contracts after open competitive bidding; and where they are honestly let and honestly received and honestly conducted, nothing but good can come to those receiving them. But wherever in the granting of governmental favors an indirect course is pursued, it will not do, and we all know it, and we ought to be careful.

The pending bill guards the Government's interests; it guards the interest of the carriers of the mail by air; it guards them as honestly and as openly as they can be; and, in my judgment, when these companies examine the bill with care, they will come to the conclusion that the measure is to their interest as well as to the interests of the Government and to the interest of the common good.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Before the Senator concludes, I should like to have him discourse to the Senate and give his views as to why the Postmaster General should control the aviation of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be glad to tell the Senator what I know about it. Is the Senator talking about air mail?

Mr. McCARRAN. I will put my question again to the Senator from Tennessee. Will the Senator kindly tell the Senate why the Postmaster General should control the aviation of the United States? I exclude Army aviation.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator had been here and had kept up with the course I have pursued for a period of 12 or 14 years, he would know that no one has ever protested against the Postmaster General controlling aviation more than I have. That was one of the complaints I have uniformly had, and have now. The pending bill takes it out of the power of the Postmaster General to control the air mail. Any decision he may make can be appealed to the Interstate Commerce Commission; and after 1 year, under the terms of the bill, the whole subject of air-mail contracts, and the certificates of routes and certificates of convenience and necessity, will be turned over to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. McCARRAN. Will the Senator kindly indicate where that is provided for in the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator cannot have read the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. I have tried to find that provision.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will read the bill and look over it carefully, I think he will find that the things of which he complains are taken care of in the measure.

Section 6 provides:

SEC. 6. The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby empowered and directed to fix and determine, within 6 months prior to the expiration date of any and every contract made under this act, and at all events at a period not later than 4 years from the date of the passage of this act, the public convenience and necessity for all air-transport routes and the fair and reasonable future rates of compensation for the transportation of such mail matter by airplane common carriers and the service connected therewith, but not in excess of the rates herein provided for, prescribing the method or methods by weight or space, or both, or otherwise, for ascertaining such rates or compensation, and to publish the same, and orders so made and published shall continue in force until changed by the Commission after due notice and hearing.

In other words, just exactly what the Senator is contending ought to be in the bill is already in the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not care to enter into a discussion of the matter at this time, but I still ask the Senator, in exploitation of his position, in explanation of his bill, whether or not it is true that at some time during the pendency of the bill he now proposes to have enacted the Postmaster General and his Department will be entirely divorced from the control of aviation in the United States?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not see how the Senator could for a moment think, in the very nature of things, that a function of the Post Office Department, that function being the carrying of the mail, could be divorced from that Department. Is the Senator in favor of divorcing the carrying of the mails by railroads from the Post Office Department?

Mr. McCARRAN. Does the fact that the Postmaster General may place the mail on trains give him control over the railroads of the Nation?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; not at all, but it gives him control over those mails, and he fixes the contracts with the railroads, subject to the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, precisely as is provided to be done in the pending bill as to the air mail.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not mean to be discourteous; I am merely inquiring of the Senator in order that he may fully elucidate his views in answer to the questions which may be propounded.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. The fact of the matter is that the rates for carrying the mail on the railroads have at no time been controlled by the Post Office Department. That matter has been handled by the Interstate Commerce Commission entirely.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. McCARRAN. If the learned Senator from Tennessee had had the experience, he would have known that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is entirely so.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have voted for a bill, since I have been in the Congress, transferring the power from the Postmaster General to the Interstate Commerce Commission. When I first came here——

Mr. McCARRAN. I am not talking about ancient history.

Mr. McKELLAR. It may be ancient history, but it is within my knowledge. When I first came here the Postmaster General made the contracts with the railroads and fixed the rates, without any supervision or control on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I forget the date of the enactment of the law, but I will get the law and show it to the Senator.

Mr. McCARRAN. How long has the Senator been here?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have been in Congress 22 years, in the Senate 18 years.

Mr. McCARRAN. I thought so, because I know, as a matter of fact, that rates on the railroads today are controlled by the Interstate Commerce Commission and have been for years.

Mr. McKELLAR. I stated that they have been, but it has not been many years—and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] was a Member of the House of Representatives, I think, at the same time I was—when the law was changed, and he will verify what I have said. The Senator from Nevada has not been here long enough to remember these things, and probably did not take as much interest in the matter before he came here as he is now taking. The fact is that the carriage of mail by the railroads was in the hands of the Postmaster General, just as the carriage of the mail by airplane has been recently, and the Congress took out of his hands the power to fix the rates and to arrange the contracts, just as the pending bill provides for the taking of the air mail out of the hands of the Postmaster General and putting it into the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In saying that I desire to add that I am not here criticizing, directly or indirectly, our splendid Postmaster General. I admire him and respect him, and I do not mind saying that here or anywhere else. I think he is a fine official. I admire his courage. I have said heretofore, and I say again, that courage in a public officer is one of the noblest traits of character.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. McKELLAR. Gladly.

Mr. McCARRAN. I desire to subscribe to the last declaration of the learned Senator from Tennessee, that courage in a public officer is one of the noblest traits of character. I am not here to criticize the present Postmaster General. I am here, however, and will be here, to defend him.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. McCARRAN. It is because of my defense of him that I say this entire matter should be taken out of a category which has resulted in the Postmaster General being subjected to criticism, and I contend that it should be put under a separate, distinct commission, so that the Postmaster General may attend to his business and the commission may attend to its business.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is no use in my defending the Postmaster General. He is amply able to take care of himself. I think he has shown an unusual facility and ability to handle matters under his care in a very fair and able way.

I have already detained the Senate much longer than I had intended. I should have finished long ago. I thank the Senate, and I yield the floor.

MINIMUM PAY FOR POSTAL SUBSTITUTES

Mr. FESS obtained the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of Order of Business 609, House bill 7483, to provide minimum pay for postal employees. This bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and there is an agreement upon the part of the leaders of both sides that it may be considered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I very much hope the bill may be considered and passed. The report of the committee is unanimous. The bill embodies a provision that ought to be enacted into law. Heretofore the substitute carriers have been, in my judgment, I will not say badly treated, but certainly not very well treated by the Government, and I sincerely hope this bill may now be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 7483) to provide minimum pay for postal substitutes, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the word "paid", to strike out "a minimum of $15 a week. Where payment at the rates now fixed by law would exceed the minimum pay herein established, payment shall be made at the rates now fixed by law" and to insert in lieu thereof "for a minimum of 100 hours of service in each calendar month at the rates fixed by law. Where the needs of the service require the employment of such substitutes in excess of 100 hours in each calendar month, they shall be paid for the number of hours they have been actually employed at the rates now fixed by law: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the reinstatement of former employees to regular positions in the Postal Service", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all original appointments of post-office clerks, city letter carriers, village letter carriers, railway postal clerks, employees in the Motor Vehicle Service, and laborers in the Postal Service shall be to the rank of substitute and that such substitutes shall be paid for a minimum of 100 hours of service in each calendar month at the rates fixed by law. Where the needs of the Service require the employment of such substitutes in excess of 100 hours in each calendar month, they shall be paid for the number of hours they have been actually employed at the rates now fixed by law: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the reinstatement of former employees to regular positions in the Postal Service.

SEC. 2. The ratio of substitute post-office clerks, substitute city letter carriers, substitute village letter carriers, substitute laborers, and substitutes in the Motor Vehicle Service in any post office, to regular post-office clerks, city letter carriers, village letter carriers, watchmen, messengers, and laborers, and employees in the Motor Vehicle Service in said office, shall be not more than 1 substitute for 7 regular post-office clerks, city letter carriers, village letter carriers, laborers, or employees in the Motor Vehicle Service, except in offices having fewer than 7 regular post-office clerks, city letter carriers, village letter carriers, laborers, or employees in the Motor Vehicle Service; and that the ratio of substitute railway postal clerks in any State, to regular railway postal clerks in said State, shall be not more than 1 substitute to 10 regular railway postal clerks: Provided, That where the ratio of substitute post-office clerks, city letter carriers, village letter carriers, railway postal clerks, and laborers, and substitutes in the Motor Vehicle Service on the date of the passage of this act is in excess of these ratios, no additional substitutes shall be appointed until these ratios are established: Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not operate to furlough or dismiss (1) any regular or substitute post-office clerks, city letter carriers, village letter carriers, railway postal clerks, or laborers, or (2) any regular employees or substitutes in the Motor Vehicle Service now carried on the rolls of the Post Office Department.

SEC. 3. Nothing in section 2 of this act shall be construed to deny any substitute post-office clerk, substitute city letter carrier, substitute village letter carrier, substitute railway postal clerk, or substitute laborer, or substitute in the Motor Vehicle Service the benefits of section 1 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming how much this bill will add to our annual expenditures.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is not believed by the experts in the Post Office Department that the bill will increase the annual expenditures by more than $3,000,000. It is my own impression that it will not reach that amount.

Mr. GORE. Is it intended to pay the substitutes while they do not work?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; it is not. The amendment which has just been adopted provides for a minimum number of hours; not a minimum wage.

Mr. GORE. How many employees does the bill affect?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There are about 26,000 postal substitutes throughout the country.

Mr. GORE. There are about 36,000 rural mail carriers. How many rural mail carriers does the bill affect?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It does not affect the rural mail carriers.

Mr. GORE. It affects only the city mail carriers?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The city carriers and the city clerks in the substitute service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ISSUANCE OF BONDS BY JUNEAU, SKAGWAY, AND WRANGELL, ALASKA

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2811) to authorize the incorporated city of Juneau, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $100,000 for municipal public works, including regrading and paving of streets and sidewalks, installation of sewer and water pipe, construction of bridges, construction of concrete bulkheads, and construction of refuse incinerator, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the incorporated city of Juneau, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to undertake the municipal public works herein specified and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $103,000. Said city is hereby authorized and empowered to regrade and pave streets and sidewalks and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $51,400; to install sewer and water pipes and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $2,750; to construct and replace a bridge and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $5,000; to construct concrete bulkheads and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $12,850; to construct a refuse incinerator and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $25,000; to employ such engineering supervision and pay such overhead expenses as may be necessary in connection with the above-mentioned public works and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $6,000. All of said public works are to be undertaken in the said city of Juneau, Alaska, except said refuse incinerator, which may be placed without the corporate limits of said city.

SEC. 2. Before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the said city of Juneau, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued in the amounts above specified for any or all of the purposes hereinbefore set forth shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said city of Juneau whose names appear on the last assessment roll of said city for municipal taxation. The form of the ballot shall be such that the electors may vote for or against the issuance of bonds for each of the purposes herein specified in the amounts herein authorized. Not less than 20 days' notice of such election shall be given by publication thereof in a newspaper printed and published and of general circulation in said city before the day fixed for such election. The registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality, and said bonds shall be issued for any or all of the purposes herein authorized only upon condition that not less than a majority of the votes cast at such election in said city shall be in favor of the issuance of said bonds for such purpose.

SEC. 3. Such bonds shall be coupon in form, may bear such date or dates, may be in such denomination or denominations, may mature in such amounts and at such time or times, not exceeding 30 years from the date thereof, may be payable in such medium of payment and at such place or places, may be sold at either public or private sale, may be redeemable, with or without premium, or nonredeemable, may carry such registration privileges as to either principal and interest, principal only, or both, as shall be prescribed by the common council of said city of Juneau at the time such bonds are authorized to be issued. The bonds shall bear the signatures of the mayor and clerk of the city of Juneau, and shall have impressed thereon the official seal of said city. In case any of the officers whose signatures or countersignatures appear on the bonds shall cease to be such officers before delivery of such bonds, such signatures or countersignatures shall nevertheless be valid and sufficient for all purposes the same as if they had remained in office until such delivery. Said bonds shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the common council of the said city of Juneau, not to exceed 6 percent per annum, payable semiannually, and the bonds shall be sold at not less than the principal amount thereof plus accrued interest.

SEC. 4. The bonds herein authorized to be issued shall be general obligations of said city of Juneau, payable as to both interest and principal from ad valorem taxes which shall be levied upon all the taxable property within the corporate limits of said city of Juneau in an amount sufficient to pay the interest on and principal of such bonds as and when the same become due and payable.

SEC. 5. No part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purpose or purposes other than those specified in this act. Said bonds shall be sold only when and in such amounts as the common council of the city of Juneau shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be disbursed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and under the orders and directions of said common council from time to time as the same may be required for said purposes.

SEC. 6. The city of Juneau is hereby authorized to enter into contracts with the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof, under the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act and acts amendatory thereof and acts supplemental thereto, and revisions thereof, and the regulations made in pursuance thereof, and under any further acts of the Congress of the United States to encourage public works, for the sale of bonds issued in accordance with provisions of this act or for the acceptance of a grant of money to aid said town in financing any public works herein authorized; or to enter into contracts with any person or corporation, public or private, for the sale of such bonds; and such contracts may contain such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by and between the common council of said city of Juneau and the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof or any such purchaser.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the incorporated city of Juneau, Alaska, to undertake certain municipal public works, including regrading and paving of streets and sidewalks; installation of sewer and water pipes, bridge construction and replacement, construction of concrete bulkheads, and construction of refuse incinerator, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $103,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER also laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2812) to authorize the incorporated city of Skagway, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $40,000, to be used for the construction, reconstruction, replacing, and installation of a water-distribution system, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the incorporated city of Skagway, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to construct, reconstruct, replace, and install a water-distribution system to replace the system now owned by the city of Skagway and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $40,000.

SEC. 2. Before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the said city of Skagway, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said city of Skagway whose names appear on the last assessment roll of said city for municipal taxation. Not less than 20 days' notice of such election shall be given by posting notices of the same in three conspicuous places within the corporate limits of the city of Skagway, Alaska, one of which shall be at the front door of the United States post office. That the registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality and said bonds shall be issued only upon condition that not less than a majority of the votes cast at such election in said city shall be in favor of the issuance of said bonds.

SEC. 3. Such bonds shall be coupon in form, may bear such date or dates, may be in such denomination or denominations, may mature in such amounts and at such time or times, not exceeding 30 years from the date thereof, may be payable in such medium of payment and at such place or places, may be sold at either public or private sale, may be redeemable, with or without premium, or nonredeemable, may carry such registration privileges as to either principal and interest, principal only, or both, as shall be prescribed by the common council of said city of Skagway at the time such bonds are authorized to be issued. The bonds shall bear the signatures of the mayor and clerk of the city of Skagway, and shall have impressed thereon the official seal of said city. In case any of the officers whose signatures or countersignatures appear on the bonds shall cease to be such officers before delivery of such bonds, such signatures or countersignatures shall nevertheless be valid and sufficient for all purposes the same as if they had remained in office until such delivery. Said bonds shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the common council of the said city of Skagway, not to exceed 6 percent per annum, payable semiannually, and the bonds shall be sold at not less than the principal amount thereof plus accrued interest.

SEC. 4. The bonds herein authorized to be issued shall be general obligations of said city of Skagway, payable as to both interest and principal from ad valorem taxes which shall be levied upon all the taxable property within the corporate limits of said city of Skagway in an amount sufficient to pay the interest on and principal of such bonds as and when the same become due and payable, and, if so provided by the common council of said city of Skagway, may be additionally secured by a direct pledge of all or any part of the revenues of said water-distribution system and any subsequent additions or extensions thereto, remaining after provisions for the payment of the cost of operation and maintenance of said system and the cost of such repairs, improvements, and betterments thereto as shall be necessary to keep the same at all times in good repair and working order.

SEC. 5. No part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purpose or purposes other than those specified in this act. Said bonds shall be sold only when and in such amounts as the common council of the city of Skagway shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be disbursed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and under the orders and directions of said common council from time to time as the same may be required for said purposes.

SEC. 6. The city of Skagway is hereby authorized to enter into contracts with the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof, under the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act and acts amendatory thereof and acts supplemental thereto, and revisions thereof, and the regulations made in pursuance thereof, and under any further acts of the Congress of the United States to encourage public works, for the sale of bonds issued in accordance with provisions of this act or for the acceptance of a grant of money to aid said city in financing any public works herein authorized; or to enter into contracts with any person or corporation, public or private, for the sale of such bonds; and such contracts may contain such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by and between the common council of said city of Skagway and the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof or any such purchaser.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the incorporated city of Skagway, Alaska, to construct, reconstruct, replace, and install a water-distribution system and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $40,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER also laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2813) to authorize the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $47,000 for municipal public works, including enlargement, extension, construction, and reconstruction of water-supply system; extension, construction, and reconstruction of retaining wall and filling, and paving streets and sidewalks; and extension, construction, and reconstruction of sewers in said town of Wrangell, which were, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to undertake the municipal public works herein specified and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $51,000. Said town is hereby authorized and empowered to construct, reconstruct, enlarge, extend, or improve its water-supply system and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $32,000; to construct a retaining wall and to backfill behind same to make a permanent street, and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $13,000; to construct, reconstruct, enlarge, extend, or improve sewers and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $6,000.

SEC. 2. Before said bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the common council of the said town of Wrangell, at which election the question of whether such bonds shall be issued in the amounts above specified for any or all of the purposes hereinbefore set forth shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said town of Wrangell whose names appear on the last assessment roll of said town for municipal taxation. The form of the ballot shall be such that the electors may vote for or against the issuance of bonds for each of the purposes herein specified in the amounts herein authorized. Not less than 20 days' notice of such election shall be given by posting notices of the same in three conspicuous places within the corporate limits of the town of Wrangell, Alaska, one of which shall be at the front door of the United States post office. The registration for such election, the manner of conducting the same, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be, as nearly as practicable, in accordance with the requirements of law in general or special elections in said municipality, and said bonds shall be issued for any or all of the purposes herein authorized only upon condition that not less than a majority of the votes cast at such election in said town shall be in favor of the issuance of said bonds for such purpose.

SEC. 3. Such bonds shall be coupon in form, may bear such date or dates, may be in such denomination or denominations, may mature in such amounts and at such time or times, not exceeding 30 years from the date thereof, may be payable in such medium of payment and at such place or places, may be sold at either public or private sale, may be redeemable, with or without premium, or nonredeemable, may carry such registration privileges as to either principal and interest, principal only, or both, as shall be prescribed by the common council of said town of Wrangell at the time such bonds are authorized to be issued. The bonds shall bear the signatures of the mayor and clerk of the town of Wrangell, and shall have impressed thereon the official seal of said town. In case any of the officers whose signatures or countersignatures appear on the bonds shall cease to be such officers before delivery of such bonds, such signatures or countersignatures shall nevertheless be valid and sufficient for all purposes the same as if they had remained in office until such delivery. Said bonds shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the common council of the said town of Wrangell, not to exceed 6 percent per annum, payable semiannually, and the bonds shall be sold at not less than the principal amount thereof plus accrued interest.

SEC. 4. The bonds herein authorized to be issued shall be general obligations of said town of Wrangell, payable as to both interest and principal from ad valorem taxes which shall be levied upon all the taxable property within the corporate limits of said town of Wrangell in an amount sufficient to pay the interest on and principal of such bonds as and when the same become due and payable. Such of the bonds as may be issued to construct, reconstruct, enlarge, extend, or improve the water-supply system of said town of Wrangell may, if so provided by the common council of said town of Wrangell, be additionally secured by a direct pledge of all or any part of the revenues of said water-supply system and any subsequent additions or extensions thereto, remaining after provision for the payment of the reasonable costs of operation and maintenance of said system and the cost of such repairs, improvements, and betterments thereto as shall be necessary to keep the same at all times in good repair and working order.

SEC. 5. No part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purpose or purposes other than those specified in this act. Said bonds shall be sold only when and in such amounts as the common council of the town of Wrangell shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be disbursed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and under the orders and directions of said common council from time to time as the same may be required for said purposes.

SEC. 6. The town of Wrangell is hereby authorized to enter into contracts with the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof, under the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act and acts amendatory thereof and acts supplemental thereto, and revisions thereof, and the regulations made in pursuance thereof, and under any further acts of the Congress of the United States to encourage public works, for the sale of bonds issued in accordance with provisions of this act or for the acceptance of a grant of money to aid said town in financing any public works herein authorized; or to enter into contracts with any person or corporation, public or private, for the sale of such bonds; and such contracts may contain such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by and between the common council of said town of Wrangell and the United States of America or any agency or instrumentality thereof or any such purchaser.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, to undertake certain municipal public works, including construction, reconstruction, enlargement, extension, and improvements of its water-supply system; construction of a retaining wall and to backfill behind same to make a permanent street; and construction, reconstruction, enlargement, extension, and improvements to sewers, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $51,000."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, these three bills, each one dealing with a separate city in Alaska, authorizing it to issue bonds for certain public purposes, were passed by the Senate. The House amended each of the bills, pursuant to a request of the Public Works Administration, from which the money is to be obtained, so as to clarify the language and make it plain that taxes must be imposed for the purpose of meeting the maturing obligations.

The view is entertained that the bills as passed gave the necessary authority, but the Public Works Administration thought the language should be made a little more definite, and the House has acceded to that suggestion.

I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to each of the three bills.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8402) to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. DOUGHTON, Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL, Mr. CULLEN, Mr. TREADWAY, and Mr. BACHARACH were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on today, April 17, 1934, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 606. An act to authorize the waiver or remission of certain coal-lease rentals, and for other purposes;

S. 1075. An act for the relief of Walter Thomas Foreman;

S. 1076. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Franklin Surety Co.;

S. 1091. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, consider, and render judgments on the claims of Edward F. Goltra against the United States arising out of the taking of certain vessels and unloading apparatus;

S. 1934. An act conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of four-masted auxiliary bark Quevilly against the United States, and for other purposes;

S. 1935. An act to amend the act of March 2, 1929, conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of the S.S. W. I. Radcliffe against the United States, and for other purposes; and

S. 2315. An act to provide for the settlement of damage claims arising from the construction of the Petrolia-Fort Worth gas-pipe line.

UNITED STATES GEOGRAPHIC BOARD

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

To the Congress:

Pursuant to the provisions of section 16 of the act of March 3, 1933 (ch. 212, 47 Stat. 1517), as amended by title III of the act of March 20, 1933 (ch. 3, 48 Stat. 16), I am transmitting herewith an Executive order abolishing the United States Geographic Board and transferring its functions to the Department of the Interior.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 17, 1934.

CHARGES OF DR. WIRT

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] has the floor. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator yield for about 2 minutes?

Mr. FESS. For what purpose?

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to make some comments on the bursting of the Wirt revolution balloon.

Mr. FESS. I will yield if the Senator will not continue too long.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator can control his own time.

Mr. FESS. I will resume the floor if the Senator continues too long.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, for some weeks now the press of the country has been filled with sensational reports regarding the supposed revelations of Dr. Wirt regarding a fanciful revolution, an imaginary Kerensky, and a bogy Stalin.

I notice from the press that six of the guests who were at the dinner with Dr. Wirt when these revelations are supposed to have taken place have testified before the House committee; and all of them contradict Dr. Wirt, and say that the charges he has recently made never had any foundation at all in fact.

It seems that Dr. Wirt is a prolific talker. When he gets cranked up he cannot stop. So he monopolized this entire dinner, and all of the things alleged to have been said about the revolution, and Stalin, and Kerensky were purely figments of his imagination.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that when men go before the committees of the Senate or of the House and under oath make false statements, false accusations, somebody ought to prosecute them in the courts for perjury, and stop sensational methods of propaganda to gain headlines and to sell books which may be published.

The Wirt myth has vanished. The Wirt bogy has been exposed. The Wirt propaganda has absolutely collapsed.

I thank the Senator from Ohio.

CHICAGO WORLD'S FAIR CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask unanimous consent to intrude in the program in order to have present consideration of a bill which has the recommendation of the President of the United States and the recommendation of the committee which will open the fair at Chicago. I desire to have the bill passed, as the fair committee in Chicago is waiting for some action to be taken in Congress. The bill is on the table, recommended by the Commerce Committee, by the four members of the Cabinet who are concerned, and by the President.

The bill allows the use of the remaining fund which the Congress allowed last year under President Hoover's administration; and I am anxious to have the Senate pass the bill, as it is desired to reopen the fair as soon as possible.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, is the report on the bill unanimous?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

Mr. FESS. If the bill does not lead to debate, I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. KING. How much is it going to cost?

Mr. LEWIS. The Government is merely asked to pay for its own exhibit. It will pay no money at all to the fair. This is—

A bill to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the participation of the United States in A Century of Progress (the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration) to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933, authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes", approved February 8, 1932, to provide for participation in A Century of Progress in 1934, to authorize an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes.

It is for no other purpose than to allow the Government to make its display. The Government officials say they may have to construct one other building. Four hundred thousand dollars is the sum now remaining, and under the bill it may be applied to the new fair if the Government wishes to use it. If the Government does not wish to use it at all, of course, it will remain unexpended.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator sure that the obligation, direct or indirect, remote or immediate, will not exceed $400,000?

Mr. LEWIS. The bill provides that it shall not exceed that amount. It is to be expended for no other purpose than that provided for in the earlier bill, and if the Government wishes to put up the extra building it is to be for the Government's own display only.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator certain that the passage of the bill will not involve a demand upon the Treasury of the United States for more money?

Mr. LEWIS. I have only the representations of Mr. Dawes and the committee and the members of the Cabinet, who assure me that this money is to be spent only for the Government's use, if demanded, and they seem to feel that it will not be necessary to spend as much as that. That is all I can tell the Senator. I must quote those to whom I have referred. That is all I know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3235) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the participation of the United States in A Century of Progress (the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration) to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933, authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes", approved February 8, 1932, to provide for participation in A Century of Progress in 1934, to authorize an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States continue its participation in the exposition, A Century of Progress (the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration), at Chicago, Ill., in 1934.

SEC. 2. For this purpose the act entitled "An act providing for the participation of the United States in A Century of Progress (the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933, authorizing an appropriation therefor, and for other purposes", approved February 8, 1932, as hereby amended, is extended and made applicable to the continuance of the participation of the United States in the said exposition in 1934 in the same manner and to the same extent and for the same purposes as originally provided in said act, except insofar as the provisions of that act specify the erection of a building or group of buildings: Provided, That there may be expended a sum not to exceed $2,500 for the purchase of a passenger-carrying automobile for the official use of the Commissioner of A Century of Progress.

SEC. 3. In addition to the sum of $1,000,000 authorized by the aforesaid act to be appropriated for the participation of the United States in A Century of Progress (the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration) and appropriated under section 2 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes", approved July 7, 1932, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $405,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to thank the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] for allowing this bill to be considered.

INCLUSION OF SUGAR BEETS AND CANE AS BASIC COMMODITIES

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood that the Senator from Ohio was getting ready to discuss the air-mail legislation.

Mr. FESS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want to interfere with the Senator's speech. I merely wish to state that it is desired, when we conclude our session this afternoon, to recess until 12 o'clock tomorrow, and at that time to have the pending bill temporarily laid aside and the sugar bill brought before the Senate. It is hoped that we can get through with the sugar bill very speedily. In view of that fact I thought, perhaps, the Senator might not want to have his speech interrupted by beginning this afternoon and then delaying its completion until we pass the sugar bill and get back to the air-mail bill. Would the Senator prefer to wait until we dispose of the sugar bill, or to proceed this afternoon?

Mr. FESS. It is understood that we are to recess quite early and to meet tomorrow at 12 o'clock. The Senator knows how anxious a Senator, who plans to speak, is to follow an argument that has just been made; but if it is understood that the sugar bill will be taken up tomorrow, I shall be very glad to accommodate the Senator, and to defer my address until the Senate shall resume the consideration of the air-mail bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I should not make even the suggestion to the Senator if it were not for the fact that Senators who represent sugar-beet regions are very anxious to secure action on this proposed legislation so that the farmers may make their contract with reference to this year's yield.

Mr. FESS. I am somewhat embarrassed by not having about me someone who is interested in the sugar question.

Mr. HARRISON. I am sure Senators generally understand that the sugar bill is to be taken up tomorrow. I merely called that fact to the Senator's attention so that he would not be interrupted in his speech. If no one desires to speak this afternoon, I shall move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair), as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations of several United States marshals, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

WILLIAM J. THOMPKINS

As in executive session,

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination of William J. Thompkins to be recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia. The nomination was confirmed by the Senate several days ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

TREATIES—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

As in executive session,

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Foreign Relations Committee having reported on an international telecommunication convention, the general radio regulations annexed thereto, and a separate radio protocol, all signed by the delegates of the United States to the International Radio Conference at Madrid on December 9, 1932, being Executive B, Seventy-third Congress, second session, I ask that the injunction of secrecy be removed therefrom.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PITTMAN. I also report back favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ask for the removal of the injunction of secrecy therefrom, a protocol signed at Rome on April 21, 1926, and effective on January 1, 1927, substituting new paragraphs for paragraphs 3 and 4 of article 10 of the convention of June 7, 1905, creating the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, being Executive C, Seventy-third Congress, second session; and I submit a report (Exec. Rept. No. 3) thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The report will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

RECESS

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 18, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 17, 1934

UNITED STATES MARSHALS

M. Frank Hammond, of Texas, to be United States marshal, southern district of Texas, to succeed Herbert E. L. Toombs, removed.

George P. Alderson, of West Virginia, to be United States marshal, southern district of West Virginia, to succeed John P. Hallanan, whose term will expire May 13, 1934.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, APRIL 17, 1934

The House met at 11 o'clock a.m.

The Reverend Walter M. Degenhardt, of the Grace Evangelical Lutheran Church of New York City, offered the following prayer:

Lord God Heavenly Father, Thou eternal creator and preserver of mankind, Thou who holdest in Thy hand all the might of man, and who hast ordained the powers that be for the punishment of evildoers, and for the praise of them that do well, and of whom is all rule and authority, we humbly beseech Thee to so rule and guide the hearts of all Thy children that they may acknowledge Thee and exalt the Son of Righteousness whom Thou hast sent. Heavenly Father, we pray Thee to be present with us in our deliberations today. Look with favor and behold all those who have been placed in authority by a brave and united people. Replenish them with Thy grace that they may always incline to Thy will and walk in Thy way. Prosper all good counsels and all just works that peace and happiness, truth and righteousness, religion and piety may be established among us throughout all generations. Into Thy hands we commit ourselves, unto Thy gracious mercy and protection we commend ourselves, as unto a faithful and merciful God. All this we pray in the name and for the sake of the world's Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

VETO OF INDEPENDENT OFFICES BILL

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address which I delivered yesterday in Greenfield, Mass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by myself before a women's gathering in Greenfield, Mass., Monday, April 16, 1934:

On March 27 President Roosevelt vetoed what is known as the "independent offices bill." It contained a great many provisions, among them restoration of certain benefits to veterans and partial restoration of salaries to Government employees which had been taken from them by the Economy Act of 1933.

Following my vote to override this veto I received from residents of the First District 28 criticisms. Included in this number were several statements that I had voted from a partisan standpoint to aid in embarrassing the President, that I had endeavored to curry favor with certain groups of people to secure political support. There were also a few statements reflecting upon my personal integrity. I deny such allegations in toto. I am satisfied that my vote was proper; also, that if all the details of the complicated parliamentary situation were understood the criticisms would not have been made.

As a matter of fact, there has been a great deal of confusion and misunderstanding of what took place, and I should like to take a few moments to clear up the matter in the minds of my listeners.

The independent offices bill is one of the annual governmental appropriation bills. Included in it this year were the controversial items relating to veterans' compensation and salary reduction. In his veto message the President claimed that the bill went $228,000,000 beyond recommendations that he made. This is clearly a mistake. As a matter of fact the passage of the bill over the President's veto resulted in a net saving in annual burden to the Government of over $111,000,000.

In view of the enormous expenditures that are being made in connection with the so-called "recovery program", a great majority of Congress felt that a 5-percent cut was sufficient in the salaries of the regular Government employees, instead of the 10-percent cut recommended by the President, particularly in view of the depreciation of the dollar and the increased cost of living under the N.R.A. In addition to a 15-percent cut, these employees have been forced to take extensive furloughs equivalent to further cuts of from 7 to 21 percent. It should be borne in mind that the employees of the new alphabetical organizations, who are new and inexperienced, are much higher paid than the regular civil-service employees.

With respect to veterans, Congress voted about $14,000,000 over what the President was willing to approve. Apparently the item which he chiefly objected to was that restoring the former compensation of veterans suffering from disabilities incurred in the service, which more than accounts for the increase referred to. These war-disabled veterans were cut from 25 to 30 percent, and, in some cases, as high as 60 percent, under the Economy Act of last year. I do not believe that anyone had any desire to reduce the compensation of this class of veterans by such a big percentage.

The following table shows the savings in veterans' benefits under the Economy Act and the amounts since restored by the President and Congress, also the remaining savings.

Original savings under Economy Act (exclusive of deferment of adjusted-service certificate fund)		$400,000,000
Subsequent Executive orders increasing payments:
June 6, 1933	$56,978,000
Jan. 19, 1934	21,000,000
Mar. 27, 1934	61,750,000
Total		139,728,000
Net savings after President's Executive orders		260,272,000
Legislation increasing payments:
Independent offices appropriation bill, 1935		14,250,000
Net savings after President's Executive orders and act of Congress increasing payments		246,022,000

One item that has been the cause of much criticism was that restoring the presumptive cases to the rolls temporarily until the question of service origin can be determined by the Veterans' Administration. This restoration was made by the President himself in his Executive order of March 27, 1934. The amount involved is comparatively small, about $9,000,000. There are 29,000 cases involved, 15,000 of which are mental cases and 12,000 tubercular cases. Practically all these men are in institutions and are public charges. Presumptive cases are those where it has been impossible to prove service origin, but where the disability is presumed to have resulted from service. If a man is mentally incapacitated, he must be confined. If he has tuberculosis, he should be in a sanatorium. The only question here involved is whether he should be a Federal charge or a local charge. Inasmuch as these men are veterans and their infirmities are presumed to be due to the war, it is felt the burden should fall on the Federal Government rather than upon the local communities.

Other provisions of the independent offices bill, having no connection with the controversial items, effected a saving of over $125,000,000. Therefore, in passing the bill with $14,000,000 more than the President was willing to approve, Congress in reality, as I said before, made a net saving by overriding the veto of $111,000,000.

It should be understood that there is still a further saving of $250,000,000 still in full force and effect under the Economy Act in the field of veterans' compensation. If Congress had not eased some of the drastic regulations under that act, which were causing such mounting dissatisfaction and unrest among veterans and others, I feel that in a short time you would have seen not only all the savings of the Economy Act wiped out but a strong possibility of the payment of the soldiers' bonus involving an outlay of $2,200,000,000 in inflated currency for the immediate payment of adjusted-service certificates which will not mature until 1945. This enormous expenditure would make the amount involved in the independent offices bill look like pretty small potatoes.

As is well known, I have on numerous occasions voted against the payment of these bonus certificates before they are due. I feel that by dealing fairly with our disabled veterans we have lessened the probability of the payment of these certificates at this time.

Committee work has been so confining that it has given me less opportunity to visit the district while Congress has been in session than in some previous years. A chance to address constituents therefore takes on the nature of a report of the manner in which I have carried out my representation of you in Washington.

The Roosevelt administration has been in charge of government now over a year. We frequently hear the expression that the honeymoon period is over. I am inclined to think that is somewhat true. At the special session last year we accepted the policies of the administration blindly, having faith and confidence in the President and a willingness to give his experiment a trial. Following the special session I advised citizens to sincerely and fully accept the President's recommendations. There were items in the so-called "recovery program" with which I was not in harmony. I want briefly to review some of these with you now, as the time is approaching when we must take account of stock and note what material will be provided for the campaign this fall.

As a result of the unprecedented authority placed in the hands of the President by the legislation of the special session last year, we are now confronted with the biggest debt this country has ever known in peace times, and it is estimated that by the close of the fiscal year 1935 our public debt will exceed that following the World War.

One of the questions which the people will decide this fall is whether or not results have justified such enormous and in many instances extravagant expenditures. We are today paying salaries to 611,752 Government employees, not counting the Army, Navy, or C.C.C. services, which is an increase of 48,265 over last year. Through Democratic efforts the Civil Service system has been largely nullified. Only last week the House voted down an amendment to place under the Civil Service employees of the Home Loan Bank Board and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. The Republicans in the House voted solidly for the amendment, which sought to take the home-loan service out of political patronage.

So many other important matters are pending that very little attention has been given to the merit system in the Government service recently. It may be desirable to build up a political machine, but if the machine fails in its accomplishment and the taxpayers are called upon to settle the bills, it will prove a boomerang, and I do not hesitate to assert that the thousands of additional Government employees who have been put on the pay roll during the past year will be a drawback rather than a benefit to the Democratic Party in the long run.

Figures are dry and uninteresting, but it is a fact that soon after I went to Washington, Congress was criticized for appropriating as much as a billion dollars in 1 year. It was called the "billion-dollar Congress." At the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, it is estimated that we will have expended during this year $10,560,000,000, or about $29,000,000 per day, with an estimated deficit for the year of $7,300,000,000 and an estimated public debt of $29,840,000,000. These figures are taken from the official 1935 Budget as submitted by the President to Congress.

In other words, the deficit for this 1 year will be seven times the cost of running the Government 1 year soon after I came to Congress. The estimated cost of the entire recovery program of the President is $14,373,000,000.

The people are, therefore, facing the question, Have results justified the expense? Or are we simply trying to pull ourselves up by the bootstraps? If much of this new legislation is to become permanent, as seems to be the program now, we will face the same questions in the future as we do today.

Voters in Massachusetts are asked whether or not they are willing to pay any part of the $50,000,000 authorized to be expended at Muscle Shoals and in the so-called "Tennessee Valley." This was one of the first measures urged by the President. There is an old expression about making two blades of grass grow where one grew before. With the Tennessee Valley project apparently the effort is to make several blades of grass grow there instead of in Massachusetts.

Another item of the Roosevelt program that I have opposed from its beginning is the so-called "processing tax." Under this plan the Government enters into agreements with the producers of certain basic commodities, whereby the production of these commodities is reduced and the land thus taken out of production is rented by the Government. The rent money is obtained by placing a tax on the first processing of such commodities, and of course this tax is ultimately paid by the consumer. The present program runs through the year 1935, having begun last summer. It is estimated the payments to the producers during that period will be $847,000,000 and the collections through taxes $835,000,000.

A few days ago I received the following telegram from Mr. George M. Putnam, president New Hampshire Farm Bureau Federation:

"One hundred fifty representatives of poultry, potato, market gardening, and fruit industries from six New England States in informal conference assembled here today. Urge the inclusion of an amendment to the Bankhead bill giving the Secretary of Agriculture authority to prohibit signers of contracts on basic commodities from increasing production for sale of nonbasic commodities. We request that you communicate this action to Senators and Representatives from New England States and also inform conferees of action taken. This shall be in no way construed as an endorsement of other features of the Bankhead bill."

The above telegram was sent to the American Farm Bureau Federation in Washington and a copy handed me by that organization.

The desired amendment was originally in the bill but was taken out in the Senate.

Apparently the farmers of New England are not to benefit by the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Under the Bankhead bill, without the desired amendment, Southern and Western lands withdrawn from the production of basic commodities may be used to produce nonbasic commodities such as poultry, potatoes, market truck, fruit, etc., in competition with those of New England. I am sorry to bring such an unfavorable report to the farmers of Franklin County. This is another indication that the present administration is not in sympathy with the agricultural, industrial, and commercial interests of this region.

The Treasury Department reports the following collections under the processing tax from New England States to the end of February 1934:

Maine	$1,451,000
New Hampshire	1,162,000
Vermont	175,000
Massachusetts	13,779,000
Connecticut	1,384,000
Rhode Island	2,469,000
Total	20,400,000

Against these collections of over $20,000,000, New England farmers have benefited during the same period only to the extent of $1,000,000 in payments under the agricultural-relief program, three quarters of a million having gone to Connecticut tobacco growers, and the balance to tobacco raisers in Massachusetts. Tobacco was the only crop involved in these payments.

On the 2d of March there was introduced in the House, at the behest of the administration and recognized as an administration measure, a bill authorizing the President to enter into reciprocal trade agreements with foreign nations. Hearings were held for 1 week at which college professors, all of them members of the administration itself, testified. One of your own neighbors from Ashfield, Professor Dickinson, a most charming gentleman, advocated this measure and referred to it as a "new protectionism."

Secretary Wallace recommended doing away with small industries, which he described as being inefficient. When Republican members of the committee inquired what industries would be sacrificed on the altar of this new protectionism, the replies were noncommittal and general.

The idea of a reciprocal trade agreement is to reduce the tariff on a certain foreign product on the theory that that country will purchase more goods from us.

The worst feature about reciprocal trade agreements is that all authority under the Constitution now vested in Congress to fix tariff rates is relinquished and this power placed in the hands of one man, the President, with permission to change these rates within a range of 50 percent and at the same time to "freeze", as it is called, the free list.

Never before has such tremendous authority been given the President, nor has it been requested. The special legislation of last spring made the President a virtual dictator over domestic affairs. This law extends this dictatorship to our foreign trade.

Last Tuesday I witnessed one of the most remarkable scenes in my entire congressional life. Dr. Wirt, for 20 years superintendent of schools in Gary, Ind., had been subpenaed to testify before a special committee.

Our largest hearing room was packed to the doors with interested people, moving-picture men, photographers, and other scientific people and paraphernalia. Dr. Wirt made a severe indictment of the leaders of the "brain trust" who are today the chief advisers of the administration. He laid his facts plainly before the committee and told the committee that it could, if it wished, put the Government at work on the charges he made.

The substance of his evidence was the expectation and intention of those close to the administration eventually to overthrow the present social order, which meant not the overthrow of government but of the present method of government as handed down to us by our forefathers. It seems to me that such a possibility is a menace to our free institutions and the constitutional form of government under which this country has existed and prospered for a hundred and fifty years.

I never heard of Dr. Wirt before this matter came up, but he is an able, brilliant, and undoubtedly an honorable man. The majority of the special committee appointed to hear the case will ridicule him and no doubt the witnesses they will call will make light of his testimony. He has, however, accurately described the type of people who are the close advisers of the administration. Possibly some of these advisers, like Professor Dickinson, do not want to change the social order, but they do want to change the established principles of agriculture, industry, and commerce.

I saw the President take the oath of office as President of the United States wherein he swore he would support and defend the Constitution. He surely intends with all his strength of character to carry out that oath, but he has close advisers who are showing more and more their interest in a change in our social order which will naturally lead to some other form of government. This is another of my objections to the present-day regime and another reason why I feel that victories await the Republican Party.

I realize that you have such a galaxy of speakers that you cannot devote more time listening to me. I have just touched a few of the high spots showing how the kaleidoscope has been revolving. There will be more to be said in the coming months, and as inventory is taken of the Roosevelt administration it will be found that on one side of the ledger are admiration and respect for our Chief Executive personally, but on the other side of the ledger the most profligate and extravagant expenditures ever known in our history without value received. They are costly experiments, and I predict the American people will soon tire of them.

You have probably read the recent address in New York of Governor Ely. I am criticizing some of the abnormal policies of the present administration. Governor Ely now feels the time has come to get back to normal conditions, and he contends that such conditions would be much more quickly reestablished by abandoning the N.R.A. and other temporary activities.

Here is the expression of judgment by a member of the President's own party, and a man in whom the people of Massachusetts have twice shown their confidence by electing him Governor. By reason of his statement, I am glad it can no longer be charged that in taking exception to the Roosevelt program we Republicans are acting from partisan motives. I have received hundreds of letters from business men in this State relative to the N.R.A., and it is significant that the only one who was thoroughly in favor of it was an undertaker.

The Republican Party is therefore cheerfully facing the approaching campaign. Within a few weeks the preprimary convention in this State will be held. I am glad to learn that the personnel of candidates for delegates to the Republican convention is a very fine one. We look for splendid results for the party at that convention. It goes without saying that included in the names of the nominees will be that of John W. Haigis, who, in addition to his popularity in western Massachusetts, will add tremendous strength to the ticket throughout the State on account of his ability, integrity, and experience in public office. The contribution of Franklin County to the ticket reflects the high standards of citizenship in this section.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order tomorrow, Calendar Wednesday, may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 7835. An act to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House thereon, and appoints Mr. HARRISON, Mr. KING, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. REED, and Mr. COUZENS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 8018. An act to authorize payment for the purchase of, or to reimburse States or local levee districts for the cost of levee rights-of-way for flood-control work in the Mississippi Valley, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3296. An act to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to Meridian & Bigbee Railway Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Naheola, Ala.", approved January 15, 1927.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2811. An act to authorize the incorporated city of Juneau, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $100,000 for municipal public works, including regrading and paving of streets and sidewalks, installation of sewer and water pipe, construction of bridges, construction of concrete bulkheads, and construction of refuse incinerator.

S. 2812. An act to authorize the incorporated city of Skagway, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $40,000, to be used for the construction, reconstruction, replacing, and installation of a water-distribution system.

S. 2813. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $47,000 for municipal public works, including enlargement, extension, construction, and reconstruction of water-supply system; extension, construction, and reconstruction of retaining wall and filling, and paving streets and sidewalks; and extension, construction, and reconstruction of sewers in said town of Wrangell.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL—1935

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], who is unavoidably absent, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 9061) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that a moment so that I may ask a question of the majority leader?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. Is it the intention to bring up later in the day the conference reports the gentleman talked about last night?

Mr. BYRNS. So far as the conference report on the Home Owners' Loan Corporation bill is concerned, I have just been informed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] that he will ask to call up that report tomorrow. The Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, who has charge of the conference report on the Bankhead cotton-control bill, is unavoidably absent at the moment. He indicated to me he would like for the committee to rise a little later on in the afternoon and take up that report. I told him that would be satisfactory to me if it was satisfactory to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who will have charge of the District of Columbia bill.

Mr. SNELL. Several Members have asked me to find out about the procedure, as they want to be here at the time the report is called up.

Mr. BYRNS. As soon as the gentleman comes in I shall inform the gentleman from New York about the procedure.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask a question of the majority leader?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Could there be given perhaps an hour's notice as to when the report will be called up, in order that we may be sure of knowing when the conference report will be taken up?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; we can do that. What kind of notice would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. TREADWAY. Why not set some definite time?

Mr. SNELL. Why not agree upon 2 o'clock this afternoon?

Mr. BYRNS. I do not know whether that will be satisfactory to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] or not. I do not know whether the gentleman will be able to be here at 2 o'clock.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have discussed the matter with the ranking minority Member on the other side, and I ask unanimous consent that general debate run on today, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] and myself.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman from Texas yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. DITTER. Can we come to an agreement as to the time we will use in general debate as a whole; that is, whether the debate will go over to a future day?

Mr. BLANTON. This will be the last appropriation bill, except the last deficiency bill, upon which debate will be confined to the bill. In other words, this will be the last general debate on an appropriation bill during this session, and there are a great many Members who wish to speak in general debate.

Mr. DITTER. That is what I have in mind. I have a number of requests on this side.

Mr. BLANTON. I think it would be best to have the debate run along for the day, and we can come to an agreement later on with reference to closing general debate.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. I may say to the gentlemen, with regard to the conference report, that I cannot say whether it will be called up this afternoon or not, but we could have an understanding that under no circumstances will it be called up before 2 o'clock.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is entirely agreeable, so far as I am concerned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. SEARS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to my colleague from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I also yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I have received many inquiries relative to a river and harbor bill, and I take this occasion to make a general reply. On May 9 of last year a river and harbor bill was reported to the House and is now upon the calendar. This was done with the consent of the President, but with the understanding that congressional action would not be urged, awaiting the Public Works program then contemplated. Since then the program of Public Works has been inaugurated, and many of the projects embraced in the bill are now being carried out under that agency. Many others, just as important, have not been included. One of the major purposes of the Public Works program was to afford immediate employment, and preference, of course, was given to those measures which gave promise of the least possible delay in execution.

Since the river and harbor bill was introduced, additional projects have been reported by the Chief of Engineers, a number of which have already, in whole or in part, been adopted in the Public Works program. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has held hearings upon these measures, and last week reported another bill, embracing the projects in the former bill, with those approved by the committee since that bill was reported.

The President does not give his assent to the consideration of any river and harbor legislation at this time, fearing the effect it might have upon the Budget. He also contemplates a new program to be applied to inland waters. That, of course, has not yet been definitely worked out. However, the bill reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is largely for the improvement of port conditions on the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts, and upon the Great Lakes. These measures would not interfere with any proposed system of internal improvements. The amounts recommended in the bill for inland waters are minor as compared with those now under execution by the Public Works Administration.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. In the list of legislation which the President desires to have passed at this session, as I have seen it in the press, there is no mention of the so-called "works bill."

Mr. MANSFIELD. I think the gentleman is correct. I presume they are expecting another appropriation.

Mr. CULKIN. So the zoning of the country by watersheds is for the present session abandoned.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman says that legislation on the river and harbor bill will not be urged.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That was the bill of last year. There has been no understanding about this bill.

Mr. MOTT. Will there be legislation on the river and harbor bill of this year?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is up to Congress.

Mr. MOTT. Does the Rivers and Harbors Committee want a bill passed at this session?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I would like to have it passed, but I see no prospect of it unless the President gives it his approval.

Mr. MOTT. Then what is the purpose of introducing a bill?

Mr. MANSFIELD. We have several purposes in view; one is that we want to put before Congress our recommendations as to what should be done. I am speaking for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Our views may not agree with the views of a majority of the House.

Mr. MOTT. Is it the intention to try to pass the bill notwithstanding the want of the President's consent?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I have not had any such view as that.

Mr. MOTT. I hope the gentleman will try to. I will do what I can to help him.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That will be up to Congress.

It has now been 4 years since a river and harbor bill was enacted. A check-up for the past 128 years fails to reveal another instance where so long a time elapsed without a river or harbor bill or navigation measure of some kind, except in the years from 1860 to 1864. That was during the period of the great Civil War, or war of secession, when the country was torn asunder by sectional feeling and internal strife. In the year 1864, and before the war had ended, Congress realized the need of certain waterways for military use. In that year seven bills were enacted providing for harbor-and-channel improvements.

In 1866 a general bill was passed authorizing the largest expenditures for waterway improvements ever made up to that time, the appropriation being for more than $3,700,000. In 1867 another bill was passed authorizing more than $4,700,000. These expenditures were about equally divided between harbors and inland waters with substantial sums for investigations and surveys.

For many years prior to 1922 it was the general custom to pass a river and harbor bill at each regular session of Congress. Occasionally a bill would get caught in a legislative jam and fail to get through. In the Sixty-fifth Congress three general river and harbor bills were passed in the 2-year period, all receiving the approval of President Wilson. This was during the World War, when it was found that the country was in need of these facilities of transportation.

Mr. COLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. COLE. While we have had no river and harbor bill since 1930, can the gentleman tell us how much money has been expended on new projects under the P.W.A. since we passed that legislation?

Mr. MANSFIELD. If the gentleman will wait a little while, that question will be answered further on.

Since the adoption of the Budget, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors no longer being an appropriating committee, the necessity for a regular annual bill does not always exist. While under the 8 years of the Wilson administration 8 bills were enacted, only 3 such bills were passed in the 8 years of the Harding-Coolidge administrations.

Under the Hoover administration, the depression coming on, only one river and harbor bill became a law. That was in 1930 and was the last bill of the kind to pass Congress. Since 1930 no new river and harbor projects have been authorized by Congress, and no changes or alterations have been granted on those previously authorized. Still, our actual expenditures for such purposes have been far greater than ever before in our history.

In the first years of the depression, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was advised to curtail authorizations for future expenditures to aid in balancing the Budget and restoring public confidence. The committee cheerfully complied and refrained from reporting a bill. In other quarters efforts were made to increase the current expenditures for public works as an aid to reemployment. This idea finally prevailed, and expenditures in 1931 and 1932 for rivers and harbors were materially increased over that of previous years.

In 1933, under the administration of Mr. Roosevelt, the National Recovery Act was passed, and all river and harbor improvement works are now carried out under the Public Works Administration. This agency, under certain restrictions, is authorized to adopt its own projects for expenditures. It has allotted for river and harbor improvements, within the past year, $178,769,908. Of this sum total, $50,557,108, or approximately 30 percent, were for expenditures on projects previously authorized by Congress.

The other sums allotted for rivers and harbors, amounting to $128,132,800, were for expenditures which Congress had not specifically approved but which the Public Works Administration had authority to adopt on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers. In order to complete these projects, additional expenditures of $235,319,700 will be required. I believe that answers the question of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE].

These projects are all doubtless meritorious. No thought of criticism is here intended. In fact, projects embraced in these allotments, totaling $46,879,500, had previously been approved by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and recommended to Congress in the river and harbor bill reported last May and now pending upon the calendar. However, they have never been approved by Congress, nor has Congress had the opportunity of passing upon them.

Regardless of merit, large expenditures made without the specific authorization of Congress will naturally invite public criticism. Why provoke such criticism when Congress can so easily avoid it by passing upon these measures before the expenditures are made? Such responsibilities should not be placed upon the executive branch when Congress can and should take action. Expenditures made in that manner are perhaps justifiable in cases of emergency, but such emergency does not exist where Congress has the opportunity to pass upon such matters for itself. Congress can now easily pass upon these measures and decide for itself where necessary expenditures should be made.

Conditions of commerce do not remain stationary. They are continually undergoing changes in development. New oil fields are being discovered. Sulphur mines and coal and mineral deposits are being developed. The products of the farm and factory are meeting with new conditions, requiring changes in the facilities for handling them. Types of ships and other floating craft are constantly undergoing a period of evolution.

In former years a 3- or 4-foot depth in our principal rivers would reasonably have accommodated the boats and traffic handled at that time. Such facilities under present conditions would be obsolete. Not only the rivers, but our ocean, Gulf, and Lake ports have undergone a similar change in requirements. The types of ships now in operation, and which are necessary for the economic movement of our commerce, require additional depth and width of harbor, channel, and turning basin.

There is nothing unusual or unreasonable in this constant evolution in our waterway requirements. Our railways and highways are undergoing similar changes to meet new conditions as they arise. The roadbed and rolling stock of the railroads of only a few years ago would be obsolete under present conditions. Neither could the automobile traffic of today be handled over the highways of yesterday.

Fifty years ago I was in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad as a freight clerk. A freight train at that time consisted of 30 to 40 cars, of capacity not exceeding 30,000 pounds, or 15 tons. Freight trains now frequently consist of 100 or more cars, with loads ranging from 50 to 90 tons to the car. Last week, Mr. Forsberg, chief engineer of the Pittsburg & Lake Erie Railroad, a very distinguished and well-informed gentleman, stated before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that his road, with the usual crew of five men, had hauled as many as 110 cars to the train, loaded with 6,000 tons of coal. This was 10 times the average trainload of a few decades ago.

In order to provide reasonably for our ever-changing conditions in shipping requirements, a national river and harbor bill should be passed by Congress at least every other year. We should have had one in 1932 and another at the present session of Congress. These matters cannot, except in a few isolated cases, be systematically taken care of in any other manner.

Such a course would not at all interfere with the annual Budget. Our actual expenditures for waterways the past 4 years, when no bills of authorization were passed, have been far greater than ever before and possibly greater than they would have been if we had gone ahead in the orderly manner of having Congress pass upon and approve the river and harbor projects upon which expenditures are to be made.

Congress has been conservative in expenditures for waterway improvements for purposes of navigation. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has been extremely cautious in its recommendations to Congress for such expenditures. The elements opposed to those inland waterways that are thought to compete with the railroads have been loud in their condemnation of Congress but are silent as to the larger expenditures authorized for such purposes by the Public Works Administration.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Can the gentleman state specifically the amount of money which the Public Works Administration has allocated to river and harbor projects without coming to Congress or to a congressional committee?

Mr. MANSFIELD. One hundred and twenty-eight million one hundred and thirty-two thousand eight hundred dollars on river and harbor projects.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman include in that amount the additional amount required to complete these projects?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Two hundred and thirty-five million three hundred and nineteen thousand seven hundred dollars.

Mr. CULKIN. So that without having any say in the premises the Congress will be asked to appropriate $250,000,000 for projects in which it had no voice?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is the case with some of the expenditure made, some of which will go for nothing unless completed.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. If Congress does not approve the further expenditure of the $235,000,000 required, what will become of the $128,000,000 that has already been expended?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is a question that I do not believe I am competent to answer.

Mr. DONDERO. It may not be of any benefit to the people at all.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Some of the expenditures will serve a good purpose, but many of them will be of no avail whatever until they are completed. There are so many different types of work included that one cannot place them all under the same category.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. To ask the gentleman if the policy that he has just outlined of river and harbor development by the Public Works Administration does not in fact constitute a complete surrender by the Rivers and Harbors Committee of jurisdiction over that branch of legislation, now vested in the discretionary jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Or the Administrator of Public Works, in that capacity.

Mr. MOTT. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Of course that takes all that legislation out of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman does not agree with that policy, does he?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I do not, except for emergency work.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. In the gentleman's speech somewhere will he set forth the number of projects that had been taken up by the Public Works Division which never had been approved by Congress or by the Rivers and Harbors Committee?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I have not that list before me now, but I can insert it in the RECORD.

Mr. SNELL. I think that would be very good information for the House and the country to show the number of projects that have been taken up which the Committee on Rivers and Harbors or the Board of Engineers have never considered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Chief of Engineers has considered and approved all of them.

Mr. SNELL. They have not necessarily approved them.

Mr. MANSFIELD. They have not been approved by the Congress; they have not been brought before Congress.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman should mention those projects that have not been approved by the legislative end of the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I believe that the minority leader will find that data in the hearings on the War Department appropriation bill.

Mr. SNELL. If that could be included in the speech of the gentleman from Texas, I think it would be good information.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I think the gentleman will find it set forth there. I ask unanimous consent to insert them in my speech at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The list is as follows:

Projects not considered by the Rivers and Harbors Committee to which allotments have been made by the Public Works Administration

	Estimated cost	Amount allotted	Additional amount required to complete
Delaware River, Philadelphia and Trenton	$3,828,000	$1,000,000	$2,828,900
Savannah River, below Augusta, Ga	470,000	482,000
Miami Harbor, Fla	3,311,000	2,000,000	1,311,000
River Styx, Fla	15,000	15,000
Upper Mississippi River	104,850,000	21,850,000	83,000,000
Missouri River; dam at Fort Peck, Mont	66,500,000	25,000,000	41,500,000
Cumberland River, below Nashville, Tenn	868,000	868,000
Kanawha River, W.Va	12,200,000	4,765,000	7,435,000
San Joaquin River and Stockton Channel, Calif	990,000	990,000
Columbia River; dam at Bonneville		20,240,700	12,168,000
Olympia Harbor, Wash	24,000	24,000
Kaunakakai Harbor, Hawaii	120,000	120,000
Total	193,176,900	77,354,700	148,242,900

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. COLDEN. The distinguished gentleman from Texas mentioned that the P.W.A. had appropriated money, I think, to the extent of $128,000,000.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. COLDEN. And $235,000,000 for projects not approved by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That have not been approved by the Congress.

Mr. COLDEN. Are there any improvements there that would not be classified as navigation, but might be of the nature of flood control and the development of power and other uses of waterways outside of navigation?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Some of them are of that type, like the Fort Peck Dam, for instance, on the upper Missouri River, largely for flood control and for power, but incidentally for furnishing water for navigation.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. The Fort Peck Reservoir involves governmental disbursements of something like $900,000,000, does it not? According to the document presented by the engineers, $400,000,000 is for power, $400,000,000 is for irrigation, and about $300,000,000 for navigation?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I am just speaking of the dam that has been approved. Twenty-five million dollars has been allocated to it now, and it will take $41,000,000 more to complete the Fort Peck Dam, as I understand.

Mr. CULKIN. Neither the committee nor the Congress ever had anything to do with that.

Mr. MANSFIELD. It has not been before the Congress.

Mr. CULKIN. And it is also true that it will take 7 years for the reservoir to fill?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It will take a number of years.

Mr. CULKIN. I mean the time necessary to actually fill the reservoir.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I am not advised as to that; I do not know how long it will take.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. Is it not a fact that Congress has empowered the President of the United States to call upon the Treasury Department to spend money for construction purposes?

Mr. MANSFIELD. All this, of course, is authorized in the National Recovery Act. That is the source of the authority.

Mr. Chairman, there is another feature to which I desire to call attention. That is as to the legal status of those projects which have not been specifically authorized by act of Congress but upon which expenditures have been made by the Public Works Administration. Whether Congress has authority to consider those projects as having been legally authorized and can appropriate money for their permanent maintenance might be a question of grave doubt.

Neither the code nor act of Congress will contain the list of the projects or the terms of their adoption.

Mr. Chairman, the improvements of the seacoast and inland waterways of the United States for the practical and systematic movement of commerce is a question in which every citizen has an interest. We have expended for such purposes, through a period of more than a hundred years, approximately one and three quarter billion dollars, about 45 percent of which has been upon inland waters.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman spoke of the Erie Railroad. It is in my district. The gentleman's mention of this company brings to my mind the fact that the Monongahela River has more freight tonnage on it per square mile of surface than any other one river in the world. It cost the Government $15,000,000 to build the locks in the Monongahela River, but over these locks since 1931 there has passed coal from West Virginia and the western part of Pennsylvania in vast tonnage. In 1931 there were about 6,000,000 tons.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I will ask the gentleman to make his question as short as possible, for my time is passing.

Mr. SNYDER. All right. We will have the gentleman's time extended if we can. The point about which I wish information is whether there is any place in the United States where a tonnage fee is charged for locking coal through canal locks.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Not in any Government project.

Mr. SNYDER. A State builds a bridge, for instance, and then charges a toll of 10 cents or 15 cents for each vehicle passing over it until the bridge is paid for. Is there any such policy in operation in regard to any of the waterways?

Mr. MANSFIELD. There is nothing of that kind in any Federal waterway project. The matter of which the gentleman speaks is within the control of the States. Different States have different laws in regard to that.

Mr. SNYDER. Could a law be passed whereby a lockage fee could be charged?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It can be done. The President has had it under consideration. I do not know what decision, if any, has been reached.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. The gentleman has in mind the theory that waterways should bear a tax in order to discharge the upkeep. The Rhine River has been used as an example of that system in operation in Europe; but is not that an entirely distinct situation where Germany, France, Holland, and Belgium participate in the traffic on that river and that it has no parallel whatever to the inland waterways of the United States?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Rhine is an international stream, and most of the large rivers of Europe are more or less under international control. An instance of this is the Danube.

Under the engineers of the War Department, backed by the authority of Congress and the confidence of the American people, our improvements have become more nearly coordinated and systematized than ever before in our history. Many of our waterways, and especially our harbors and channels on the ocean, Gulf, and Lakes coasts, are sadly in need of alteration and improvement, as is shown by the hearings before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors during the past 2 years. It is to be hoped that these matters may be called to the attention of Congress at an early day.

Our total water-borne commerce, of course, has been decreased enormously during the depression, but is again assuming large proportions. The last annual report of the Chief of Engineers shows that the traffic handled through the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific ports amounted to 231,581,086 tons, valued at $9,450,112,120. That of the Great Lakes was 54,913,140 tons, valued at $893,207,794. Our rivers and other inland waters, after deducting duplications, had a traffic of 151,276,145 tons, valued at $2,589,991,917.

These were the figures for 1932, and are from the latest official reports available. Reports for 1933 so far as heard from through the port authorities, in many instances, show enormous increases over the previous year.

The public was recently given a brief synopsis of the plans of the President for a national system, consisting of commissions to take charge of the several watersheds of the United States, for the purpose of planning and improving our rivers for all national purposes. These purposes are so closely interrelated as to seem incapable of being segregated. The country looks forward with interest to whatever successful and comprehensive plan that may be evolved.

Any successful program that can be worked out must necessarily be based upon the information obtained in response to the surveys embraced in Document No. 308, authorized by Congress in the river and harbor bill of 1925.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Does the gentleman believe that Congress should delegate to any departmental group power to initiate and control the development of these improvements in inland or coastal waterways? Is this the gentleman's judgment after his long and distinguished service in connection with this matter?

Mr. MANSFIELD. As I understand the proposition, they can act in an advisory capacity only. Reports are to be made to them and they in turn make their recommendation to Congress, but Congress is the final arbiter in the proposition.

Mr. CULKIN. Is the gentleman sure of that?

Mr. MANSFIELD. No; I do not know for a certainty.

Mr. CULKIN. Under existing law these matters, such as the Fort Peck Reservoir or the Grand Coulee Dam, involving $50,000,000, has not come to Congress.

Mr. MANSFIELD. No.

Mr. CULKIN. And have not been considered by any committee?

Mr. MANSFIELD. No; but that is not in the permanent program for the future; that is under the Public Works Administration for temporary emergency expenditure.

Mr. CULKIN. It is, however, a rather healthy disbursement; but what I am getting at—and I hate to take up the gentleman's time—is the gentleman's opinion, based on his long service and experience, as to the advisability of Congress by legislation delegating to any bureau or department the power to initiate, regulate, or enter into improvements?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I believe my answer to the gentleman from Oregon a while ago is an answer to the question of the gentleman from New York—that they can be regarded only as emergency measures and not permanent works.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. What is the gentleman's opinion as to whether or not commissions can work out rivers and harbors projects better than the Rivers and Harbors Committee of this Congress?

Mr. MANSFIELD. They could not unless they were better informed upon the subject than is the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. DONDERO. The record for 140 years shows that it has been taken care of.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is the way it appears to me. This was the case with the Tennessee River, where a most thorough study was made under Document No. 308, and also under the survey in the river and harbor bill of 1922, when a half million dollars was authorized for the commencement of the studies.

After securing the information provided for in the bills reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the Tennessee River, with all its works for navigation installed during a period of 80 years, was then taken completely out of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the creation of the Tennessee Valley Authority, under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. And is it not a fact that not only was Congress ousted from this situation but the engineers who made the survey costing a million dollars were also ousted and have nothing to do with it at the present time.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Tennessee Valley Authority under that law has full power to act.

Mr. CULKIN. And the engineers are not in the picture?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Only insofar as they are continued in the employ of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE], a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, was the author of the provision for the general purpose survey of the Tennessee River, and other rivers, embraced in Document No. 308. The pioneering of this program was on the Tennessee. When the time came for its culmination, in the creation of the Tennessee Valley Authority, the gentleman from Alabama, as a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, was not permitted to enter with the host into this land of promise, to which he had led the way, but, like his prototype of old, was permitted to view the scene from a distant mountain top.

Mr. Chairman, I hope I may be pardoned if I call attention to conditions under which the ocean commerce of my home State of Texas is laboring. On page 53 of the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations for the War Department for the fiscal year 1935, there is a table of ports inserted by General Pillsbury, Assistant Chief of Engineers. It embraces our 20 leading ports for the year 1932. The tonnage, of course, was far below the average of a few years ago, but in each of 13 of these ports, for the year 1932, more than 10,000,000 tons of freight were handled. These ports, in the order of their rank, are as follows:

Rank, Port, Tonnage
1 New York, N.Y.	87,733,459
2 Philadelphia, Pa.	18,837,868
3 Los Angeles, Calif.	18,288,705
4 Boston, Mass.	14,012,172
5 Beaumont, Tex.	13,218,880
6 Houston, Tex.	12,710,432
7 Baltimore, Md.	12,227,271
8 Norfolk, Va.	11,524,264
9 Buffalo, N.Y.	11,146,462
10 Toledo, Ohio	10,790,210
11 Port Arthur, Tex.	10,612,975
12 Duluth, Minn.	10,519,804
13 New Orleans, La.	10,491,084

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. I call attention of the gentleman to the fact that the year 1932 is rather unfair to the port of Los Angeles, because in that particular year Philadelphia crowded Los Angeles from second place by a few hundred thousand tons. I also call attention of the gentleman and my colleagues to the fact that for the year 1931, for instance, Philadelphia had a tonnage of 19,283,863 tons and Los Angeles had a tonnage of 23,097,778 tons, or nearly 4,000,000 tons more than our rival, the city of Philadelphia; that in 1929 the Philadelphia tonnage was 21,674,752 tons, while Los Angeles had a tonnage of 29,106,095 tons, or almost 8,000,000 tons in excess of Philadelphia.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The gentleman from California is correct. The shipping conditions of 1932 were abnormal, and many of these ports normally have millions of tons more than embraced in the table put in the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COLDEN. Does not the Philadelphia tonnage include the Schuylkill River as additional territory to that port?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Delaware River?

Mr. COLDEN. The Schuylkill River.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I should judge so. These were the only American ports that handled as much as 10,000,000 tons in 1932. Three of these ports, Buffalo, Toledo, and Duluth, are upon the Great Lakes, where the requirements for shipping are entirely different from those upon the high seas. Of the 10 ocean and Gulf ports, handling more than 10,000,000 tons each in 1932, 3 were in Texas—Beaumont, Houston, and Port Arthur. It is a significant fact that the present project depth in each of these Texas ports is only 30 feet, while all of the other ocean and Gulf ports embraced in the table have project depths of from 35 to 40 feet.

I have here a photostat from the Engineer's office, showing that the tonnage of these three Texas ports for the year 1933 registered a gain over that shown in the table for 1932 of 8,060,691 tons, and this did not include cargoes in transit and bunker fuel which would add nearly 3,000,000 tons additional.

These conditions in Texas should be brought more nearly to an equality with other ports handling a like amount of shipping of similar character. They have been approved for a depth of 32 feet by the engineers of the War Department, and each of them is now embraced in the pending river and harbor bill, which has not come to a vote. It is true, they have been approved by the Public Works Administration for a portion of the money necessary to give them this proposed depth of 32 feet. However, the allotments of the Public Works Administration, according to the estimates, will lack $1,000,000 of giving the required depth to the Houston Ship Channel, and nearly another $1,000,000 on the Sabine-Neches waterway on which the ports of Beaumont and Port Arthur are situated. Unless the required depth of 32 feet is given the entire length of these respective ship channels, then the 32-foot depth given to them on three fifths of the distance will be of little avail. The tonnage handled in these Texas ports is of such a nature as to require sufficient depth to accommodate the freight and tank ships of the largest capacity afloat.

At the ports of New Orleans and Baton Rouge—ports comparable with those of Texas as to the type of ships and character of commerce, but where a least depth of 35 feet is available—338 ship entries were made in 1933 by ships drawing more than 30 feet. On page 952, volume 1, Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1930, it is shown that for the previous year 82 ship entries were made through the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi by ships drawing more than 30 feet, the maximum draft for that year being 33 feet. None of these ships can enter any Texas port when loaded to capacity. This is the equivalent of a tax that must be borne by the producers and consumers of that commerce, the largest items of which are oil and gasoline, cotton and wheat.

I simply call attention to these matters for the purpose of illustrating the need for a river and harbor bill to more nearly equalize the conditions of shipping upon the Gulf, in which the producers and consumers of the whole country have an interest.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Is there any reason why a small amount of money might not be allotted out of the Public Works fund to increase the depths of the Texas ports to accommodate these other vessels which cannot now enter the ports with cargoes?

Mr. MANSFIELD. If they have the money, there is no reason why that should not be done. They claim they have no more money. They have allotted enough to do approximately three fifths of the work, with the expectation doubtless of making further allotments. Unless further allotments are made and the money provided, the money that has been expended and the work being carried out now will serve very little purpose.

Mr. DONDERO. Would not this small amount of money have served a better purpose rather than to have expended $128,000,000 on projects which were not approved by the committee?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I cannot pass upon matters that the Public Works Administration has passed upon, because I do not know what evidence they had before them.

Mr. THOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. THOM. The gentleman does not think the Public Works Administration, after beginning these projects, are going to walk away from them and not finish the projects? That seems ridiculous to me. As a matter of fact, they are going to ask for more appropriations in this Congress.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I have not made any intimation to that effect that I know of.

Mr. THOM. I thought that was the drift of the conversation here, that the Public Works Administration was going to walk out on those partly finished projects.

Mr. MANSFIELD. No. I said the claim was made that they had no more money available.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. ADAMS. In view of the statement made by the distinguished Chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, does not the gentleman think it would be advisable if a bill is brought in appropriating money for P.W.A. work that the appropriation be earmarked to continue, carry out, and complete worth-while projects already undertaken?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I should favor the earmarking of all appropriations that can be consistently earmarked.

Mr. ADAMS. My thought is that if we are not sure they are going to be continued by the administration, why not make sure of that fact by having the funds so earmarked.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That will be up to Congress.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Is it not a fact that the P.W.A. is merely an emergency recovery proposition and has no assurance of a continuous existence?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is entirely correct, as I understand the matter.

Mr. Chairman, our river and harbor legislation has had a tortuous road to travel. A few references might not be without interest. In our early history internal improvements by the Federal Government were generally regarded as being unconstitutional or, at least, of doubtful constitutionality. Though, dating back even to the first Congress, bills were passed for the maintenance of lighthouses, beacons, buoys, and public piers as aids to navigation.

Under the administration of Mr. Jefferson two bills were passed for the erection of public piers in the Delaware River; one in 1802, the other in 1806. In 1809 he approved a bill for deepening and extending to the Mississippi River the canal of Carondelet. In 1808 Mr. Gallatin, Secretary of the Treasury under Mr. Jefferson, advocated the improvement of highways and waterways as the permanent policy of the Federal Government.

In 1817 Mr. Madison vetoed a bill for internal improvements, including waterways. In his message he said:

> The legislative powers vested in Congress are specified and enumerated in the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, and it does not appear that the power proposed to be exercised by the bill is among the enumerated powers.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman has given us a history of these improvements. A few weeks ago there was a resolution brought in on the floor one morning without discussion and without the Chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee or any member of the committee knowing anything about it, asking that the President be requested to make and furnish to the House and Senate a report on a comprehensive plan for the improvement and development of the rivers of the United States, all of which information was and is now available in Report No. 308 that the Board of Engineers and the various engineering officers of the country have made over a period of years under direction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. The resolution was adopted by the House, and we are expecting that this report will be furnished to the Congress within the next few days or few weeks.

This resolution was brought in by the Flood Control Committee, which had no jurisdiction over any of the matters mentioned in the report to be submitted except the one item of flood control. When the report comes in, does not the gentleman believe it should be referred to the Rivers and Harbors Committee for study and consideration and that any legislation affecting navigation or affecting any parts of the report other than the flood-control feature should be directed to the Rivers and Harbors Committee and that the Rivers and Harbors Committee should prepare such legislation and report?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I do not think there is any doubt about that matter.

Mr. PARSONS. I have quite a history here of the development of Rivers and Harbors and of the Flood Control Committees. The Rivers and Harbors Committee was created in 1882 or 1883. It had jurisdiction over the improvement of rivers for navigation, for power of flood control, irrigation, and reclamation.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And pollution.

Mr. PARSONS. All of these matters were taken care of and the appropriations, up until the Budget was created in 1921, for all these purposes were passed upon by the Rivers and Harbors Committee and reported to the House. In the creation of the Flood Control Committee the former leader of this House, the Honorable Finis Garrett, brought in a rule on February 3, 1916, to create this committee, and among other things, in talking about the jurisdiction that the committee would have, he said that the committee would have jurisdiction of that subject matter only, speaking of flood control, and therefore the Rules Committee reported unanimously to create this committee to have charge of one thing only, and that was flood control. There was quite a discussion in the RECORD as of that date, and on page 2069 of the RECORD, Mr. Sparkman who was interested at that time in rivers and harbors had this to say——

Mr. MANSFIELD. He was chairman of the committee.

Mr. PARSONS. Yes; and he rose and asked this question:

> What I want to ask is what effect would this rule, if adopted, or this amendment to the rule, and the investigation by this committee under it have on the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors over that class of work?

Mr. Garrett, answering, had this to say:

> I should say, Mr. Speaker, that bills relating to flood control would be referred to this new committee if the rule be adopted. I do not think that those bills which refer to the question of navigation of the Mississippi would be referred to this new committee but that they would be referred, as they have always been since the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was created, to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Now, in view of the evidence in the RECORD as to the creation of this committee, does not the gentleman believe that when this report comes back to the Congress it should be referred to the Rivers and Harbors Committee, because the Rivers and Harbors Committee was the parent committee of all these things in the beginning, and having had the Army engineers and the Board of Engineers make the surveys that this report will contain, as a natural consequence, it should go to this committee.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I may state to the gentleman that I think there was some further discussion of the subject. Was there not a question asked, If a proposition embraced a mixed question of flood control and navigation, to what committee it would be referred?

Mr. PARSONS. It would go to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I think Mr. Garrett gave that assurance before the committee was created.

Mr. PARSONS. He did.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I went on that committee a few months afterward, in March 1917, and served on it for 4 years.

Mr. PARSONS. If the gentleman will yield further, after the Committee on Flood Control was created in 1916, it reported out a bill known as the "act of March 1, 1917", and they exceeded their authority and jurisdiction at the time they reported their first bill because, in section 3 of the first flood-control act, this committee took charge and took jurisdiction of all of the questions embraced in flood control, navigation, reclamation, irrigation, drainage of swamps, power, and others. The language runs something like this: That all examinations and surveys of projects relating to flood control shall include a comprehensive study of the watershed or watersheds. There is nothing in the rules of the House that would give them jurisdiction over any such matters.

Mr. WILSON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. PARSONS. In just a moment; let me finish this quotation:

> And the report thereon, in addition to any other matters upon which a report is required, shall give such data as it may be practicable to secure in regard to the extent and character of the area to be affected by the proposed improvements; the probable effect upon any navigable water or waterway, the possible economical development and utilization of water power and such other uses as may be properly related to or coordinated with the project.

In other words, they just spread their wings on March 3, 1917, and encompassed the whole scheme of everything which the Rivers and Harbors Committee had done since 1882.

Mr. WILSON. Since the gentleman is quoting from my speech, will not the gentleman yield? That provision that is in the Flood Control Act authorizing these surveys was passed by Congress, was it not?

Mr. PARSONS. It was passed by the House.

Mr. WILSON. Then it became the law and superseded any law preceding that date.

Mr. PARSONS. It did not supersede the jurisdiction of the Flood Control Committee, because the rules of the House provided for the jurisdiction of the Flood Control Committee and not this act.

Mr. WILSON. The passage of any act supersedes any prior act.

Mr. PARSONS. Not at all.

Mr. WILSON. That is the law.

Mr. PARSONS. The committees function under the rules of the House, and the House decides upon the matters which may be assigned to the different committees.

Mr. WILSON. But did not Congress pass the act giving that authority to the Flood Control Committee?

Mr. PARSONS. They passed this act I have referred to.

Mr. WILSON. And that is the law.

Mr. PARSONS. But that does not give the Flood Control Committee jurisdiction of these subjects, because that is within the jurisdiction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee under the rules of the House.

Mr. WILSON. An act of Congress supersedes the rules of the House.

Mr. PARSONS. I cannot agree with the gentleman in that respect.

Mr. WILSON. I want to correct the gentleman's statement about the record. This resolution referred to was introduced by me in the House and by Senator NORRIS in the Senate. It was not a resolution giving certain authority to the Committee on Flood Control but was a resolution asking that the President send recommendations to the Congress upon these questions.

Mr. PARSONS. Did not the gentleman have this resolution before his committee for discussion?

Mr. WILSON. I did not.

Mr. PARSONS. The Committee on Flood Control knew nothing about the resolution?

Mr. WILSON. Oh, so far as that is concerned, they probably knew about it; but that was not necessary, because the act of Congress itself in making provisions for the jurisdiction of the Committee on Flood Control naturally carried the authorization there.

Mr. PARSONS. The Committee on Flood Control has no jurisdiction of any question except the matter of flood control. It certainly has no jurisdiction over power or navigation. Those matters have been with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for more than 50 years.

Mr. WILSON. The major features involved in all those questions relate to flood control, and the surveys are made under the authority granted by the creation of the Committee on Flood Control. There is no conflict between the Committee on Flood Control and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and I am sorry that such a question has been raised, because this act of Congress was supported by the leaders on the Republican side and upon the Democratic side and the then Speaker of the House and the leader on the Republican side, and in creating this committee they gave it authority to handle these investigations which coordinate a national plan and delegated to it the handling of reports made by the same engineering bodies that are under the control of the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

Mr. PARSONS. If the gentleman from Texas will yield further, the gentleman from Louisiana does not contend for a moment that the Flood Control Committee has jurisdiction over matters of navigation.

Mr. WILSON. Incidental to flood control; yes.

Mr. PARSONS. Storage of water, creation of power, is not within the committee jurisdiction.

Mr. WILSON. If the major portion of the project is improvement of rivers and harbors, it goes to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. If the main portion is flood control, it goes to the Committee on Flood Control.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not want to enter into any discussion as to the jurisdiction of the two committees, but I have been interested in listening to the passage between the two gentlemen relative to the two committees. I was a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors when the Committee on Flood Control was set up. I was interested in listening to what Mr. Garrett said at that time about the jurisdiction of the two committees.

As I recall the history under which it was set up—I think it is fair to say to the House that the jurisdiction of the Flood Control Committee went way beyond what the Rivers and Harbors Committee expected it would.

It was brought about in a peculiar way. Mr. Sparkman, of Florida, was Chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. He was a delightful gentleman, a competent and efficient chairman. The next man to him was Ben Humphreys, of Mississippi, who was also a leader, but there was no possibility of Mr. Humphreys ever becoming chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the House, I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes more, and out of that I hope he will permit me to say a word about his services here. I wish to say in behalf of the service of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] that he entered this House with me in the Sixty-fifth Congress. The other day, on April 2, he finished here his seventeenth continuous year of valuable and efficient service.

The general interest in his hour's speech today is manifested by the fact that 30 minutes was yielded to him by the minority side from across the aisle. I think he is one of the most valuable men in the House, and I know that I express the sentiment of the House when I say that no man in the United States knows more about river and harbor work than he does. [Applause.]

Every Member of the House is his friend, and he has the confidence and respect and esteem of the whole body.

I remember when I was a boy, some of the happiest days I ever spent was when I lived in a county in his district. In hunting deer and fox with hounds I used to know every cow trail between La Grange and Columbus, where he lives. I hope he will serve here with the same valuable service that he has given in the past for many years to come. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thank my colleague. I will now yield to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. It is a great pleasure, Mr. Chairman, to be entirely in accord once in a while with our colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. I would not expect the gentleman from Massachusetts to be entirely in accord with me only occasionally. [Laughter.]

Mr. TREADWAY. I could not be and retain my reputation at home. [Laughter.] But when he speaks of my good friend Mr. MANSFIELD, the Chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, with such praise, I heartily coincide with him.

I only want to add a word. No matter what the record of 15 or 20 years ago may say, the actual fact is that there was a desire to create another committee to take care of some ambitious men who wanted positions. That is the history of the whole set-up of the Flood Control Committee, and I do not think that such jurisdiction should have been taken away from the Rivers and Harbors Committee as was done at that time. As I said, I served years ago on the committee when Mr. Sparkman, of Florida, was Chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and now we have as efficient and fine a chairman as Mr. Sparkman was at that time in the person of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD]. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts and my colleague [Mr. BLANTON] for the compliments they have paid me.

Mr. Madison was denominated the "Father of the Constitution", but his rigid construction of it in this regard has long since failed to be sustained by the courts and by the people. Congress failed to override the veto by the necessary two-thirds majority, though on the roll call in the House there were 60 yeas and 56 nays. It is a notable fact that Clay, Webster, Calhoun, and William Henry Harrison all voted to override the veto, Mr. Clay being the Speaker of the House at the time. Mr. Webster was then a Member of the House from the State of New Hampshire, and William Henry Harrison, afterward President, was then a Representative from Ohio.

In 1832 Andrew Jackson vetoed a bill containing waterway and other improvements. In his message he said:

> It is obvious that such appropriations involve the sanctity of a principle that concedes to the General Government an unlimited power over the subject of internal improvements, and that I could not, therefore, approve a bill containing them without receding from the position taken in my veto of the Maysville road bill, and afterward in my annual message of December 7, 1830.

In the annual message referred to by Mr. Jackson he drew a distinction between bills for internal improvements, considering some as of national scope, while others he denominated as local. Several bills for river and harbor improvements were approved by him as of national scope, and the bill meeting with his veto passed Congress by the necessary majorities. On March 3, 1837, the last day of Mr. Jackson's term as President, he approved a general river and harbor bill appropriating $1,666,722, the largest river and harbor bill ever passed by Congress up to that time.

In 1854 and 1856 several bills for internal improvement, embracing waterways, were vetoed by Franklin Pierce, whose views upon the constitutionality of such measures were similar to those of Mr. Jackson. All of the bills vetoed, with one exception, were passed by the necessary majorities. He also approved several bills for waterway improvements as not coming within the scope of his objections.

Mr. Pierce, in his message of December 30, 1854, makes reference to President John Quincy Adams, which is quite interesting. It is as follows:

> President John Quincy Adams, in claiming on one occasion, after his retirement from office, the authorship of the idea of introducing into the administration of the affairs of the General Government a pertinent and regular system of internal improvements, speaks of it as a system by which the whole Union would have been checkered over with railroads and canals affording high wages and constant employment to hundreds of thousands of laborers, and he places it in express contrast with the construction of such work by the legislation of the State and by private enterprise.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder if those views are entertained by the statesmen representing Massachusetts at this time.

The first general river and harbor bill to be vetoed was by President Arthur in 1882. The bill carried appropriations of more than $18,000,000, which Mr. Arthur thought was excessive and more than the Treasury could bear. He stated that he would have approved a bill for half the amount. The bill passed over his veto by more than the necessary two-thirds majority. In the Senate Ransom, Sherman, Vest, Voorhees, Windom, Allison, Aldrich, Coke, Gorman, Hoar, Kellogg, and Pugh were among those who voted "yea." Several river and harbor bills were approved by Mr. Arthur.

In 1896 a river and harbor bill was vetoed by President Cleveland. This was in the last year of his second administration. He had previously approved all river and harbor bills presented to him, but this measure he denominated as "so extravagant as to be especially unsuited to these times of depressed business and resulting disappointment in Government revenue."

It will be borne in mind that this was soon after the Supreme Court had declared the income tax law unconstitutional, and the Government was shorn of a large proportion of its revenues. Mr. Cleveland's motto was "rigid economy" in times of depression. The bill was passed over his veto, Bankhead, Burton, Cannon, Champ Clark, Culberson, Cummings, Gillette, Grosvenor, McMillan, and Underwood voting yea.

Since 1896, no river and harbor bill has been vetoed, and the Chief Executives have shown a friendly interest in navigation improvements. President Theodore Roosevelt has been the outstanding President of all time for the improvement of inland waters. His message in 1908, in transmitting the report of the Inland Waterways Commission, can truthfully be said to be the beginning of the renaissance of river transportation in the United States.

No President of the United States has ever expressed antipathy to waterway improvements by the Federal Government, except upon constitutional or economic grounds. From George Washington to Franklin D. Roosevelt, both included, every President, with the possible exception of William Henry Harrison and James A. Garfield, has approved measures in aid of navigation. William Henry Harrison served as President for only 30 days, and Mr. Garfield for only a few months. I know of no measure of the kind being presented to them during their short tenures. Mr. Harrison was one of those who voted to override the veto of Mr. Madison. It is a reasonable certainty he would have approved such a bill, if given the opportunity. Mr. Garfield voted for such measures when a Member of Congress.

Mr. Madison, who in 1817, for constitutional reasons, vetoed a bill for internal improvements embracing canals, did not hesitate the year before to approve a bill for lighthouses, buoys, and beacons, as aids to commerce and navigation. In the face of the unbroken record of our Presidents, from the first to the latest, in the improvement of waterways, who will presume to condemn such measures? To such contender I should be pleased to reply in the language attributed by Shakespeare to Brutus: "If any, speak; for him have I offended." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute more.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas 1 minute more.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thank the gentleman very much. I have here volume XIV, no. 2, of the Annals of Congress of 1816–17, containing the bill vetoed by Mr. Madison and his veto message, with the record vote in the House showing Mr. Webster, Mr. Clay, Mr. Calhoun, Mr. William Henry Harrison, voting to override the veto, and here is a note at the bottom in parenthesis:

> (It will be observed that the Speaker [Mr. Clay] on this occasion, differing from all other questions before the House, claimed and exercised the right to vote.)

That is the only instance where he did it as Speaker. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, during the past week there has been quite a bit of discussion in reference to the rules of the House with regard to a petition to discharge a committee from further consideration of a bill by the signatures of 145 Members to such a petition. I call attention to the rule as adopted on Tuesday, December 8, 1931, and quote from Mr. Pou, who was then Chairman of the Committee on Rules:

Mr. Speaker, 31 years ago I was a Member of this House under what I may term a "one-man oligarchy." For 10 years following my entrance into the House, the House of Representatives had tied itself, hand and foot, and delivered itself to the Speaker. The House was under the control of a Committee on Rules, composed of three men—the Speaker, a gentleman from his side of the House, and one man from the minority side.

This discharge rule provides for the discharge of committees under certain circumstances. It even provides for the discharge of the Committe on Rules. I have no objection to that. As long as I am at the head of the Rules Committee there is not going to be any sitting on the lid. [Applause.] I am willing at any time if any gentleman thinks the Rules Committee is attempting to stifle legislation to have you put your discharge rule into operation. This is also what the proposed change does with respect to other committees.

I may say that this matter will be discussed in detail by the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Crisp, and perhaps by other gentlemen on this side. The Crisp discharge rule also provides in another paragraph for the calling together of committees where the chairman refuses to call the committee together. Surely nobody objects to this.

Another provison of the Crisp rule is that providing for action by the conferees when they refused to act. Surely nobody can object to that. There are the three high spots in the Crisp amendment to the rules of the House—the discharge of committees, the calling of committees together and compelling the conferees to act.

A good deal has been said about amendments to this Crisp amendment to the rules. We are willing to stand or fall by the action taken by the Democratic caucus. I believe an overwhelming majority of the House is in favor of the proposed liberalization of the rules.

Mr. Crisp then made the following remarks, and I want to say here that I am not reading all the remarks that were said, so that I am not trying in any way to deceive the House in the statements made by Mr. Pou or Mr. Crisp, for whom I have the highest regard. I quote:

Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, this is the day I long have looked forward to—a Democratic Speaker, this House under Democratic rule, carrying out the great principles of democracy, that a majority shall rule, and the adoption of rules with sufficient authority and so adjusted that they shall be rules for the entire House—not to meet any political exigency of any party, but to insure the fundamental right of democracy, that a majority of the House may work its will under the terms of those rules. [Applause.]

The rules that are presented here today are exactly the rules, word for word, that were presented by me in the last Congress and debated with the distinguished majority leader on the floor of the House with only one change. The number that is required to initiate a motion to discharge being changed from 100, as originally written, to 145.

* * * * * * *

I determined to evolve, to the very best of my ability, a rule that could not be filibustered, that could not be circumvented, giving the House a chance to discharge a committee and put a bill on its passage; and the second method in this rule which you have before you today will absolutely accomplish that purpose.

* * * * * * *

Now, I would like especially to stress to my friends of the press that 145 does not discharge a committee. The opponents of this rule say that that 145 would permit unbaked legislation. Such is not the case. The 145 is simply the number necessary to initiate the right for the House itself to vote twice a month as to whether or not it will discharge a committee. .To discharge a committee it would be necessary to have a majority of the membership of the House voting, a quorum being present. As this rule can only come up 2 days in a month, the motion to discharge will have to be on the calendar 7 days, and the membership of the House will know it, will be here, and, in my judgment, it will always require 200 or more voting in the affirmative to discharge a committee, but it is within the power of the 145 to put the House on record.

* * * * * * *

I welcome the minority's program. I hope you will propose one. This rule gives you an opportunity to do so. If it is like your programs in the past, I am quite willing to vote against it, and our majority will vote against it, and yet you can have your record known to the country.

That is all these rules will do. They are democratic. They put it in the power of the majority of this House to carry out its will, whether that majority is made up of Democrats, Progressives, Republicans, or any other party. These rules are made in keeping with the spirit of democracy, in keeping with the spirit of the Constitution of the United States that the majority may rule; and with these rules there can be no hue and cry throughout the land that the House of Representatives is gagged by a triumvirate. [Applause.]

I shall also quote a statement by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]:

Today, after 22 years, thanks to the Democratic majority, we again have a chance and an opportunity to liberalize the rules and to relieve the membership from the extremely restrictive and established rulings which have been in effect the last 10 years of Republican rule.

To me, who continually demanded the liberalization of these rules, it is a great satisfaction that we are about to protect the Members in their rights and privileges so long denied them. For not only was the House often at the mercy of the Speaker but also at the mercy of the conferees and of the various chairmen of the committee.

On the vote on this rule there were 227 yeas and 193 nays. Practically all the Democrats voted for the rule. In this connection, let me remind you that Mr. BYRNS, the majority leader of the House, during the past week has severely criticized the fact that this rule was detrimental to the orderly functioning of the House, claiming that it interfered with the right of those in charge of legislation and that it is an obstacle to legislation rather than an aid to it; and a way is being sought to prevent these rules from coming up for discussion on the floor of the House.

I, myself, am convinced that if our Constitution is to survive we must have party government, and the party must be responsible for its acts in order that it may function to the best interests of the American people. The other day I was interrogated by the majority leader as to my attitude in reference to this rule and I made the statement that I voted against the rule in 1931 because I thought it was wrong and that I would vote to support a change of the rule because I am firmly convinced that party government should function properly if we do not want to establish some form of government in this country that will weaken our Constitution and make us an inferior Government of a one-man rule, or set up a dictatorship, and I am opposed to any dictatorship.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. How much support could we expect from the gentleman's side were we to bring up the question of amending this rule?

Mr. RICH. I may say that if we as American citizens under the present condition of our country would do those things we in our own minds and consciences feel are for the best interest of the country we would not play politics; and if we did not play politics then I think that the majority of the Republicans who, at the time this vote was taken, opposed that rule should vote for its modification.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I agree with the gentleman, but unfortunately the Republican Party sometimes plays politics.

Mr. RICH. I do not think the Republican Party is nearly as much inclined to play politics as is the Democratic Party, because during the time I have been here, since 1930, I have seen little but politics played on the Democratic side of the House. This statement I am sorry I have to make. A great many of the laws that have been enacted at this session of the Congress will rise up to damn the Democratic Party, for they can never explain the operations of those laws to the satisfaction of their constituents and the country at large.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Of course the Democratic Party will speak for itself at the proper time.

Mr. RICH. The members of that party certainly will have to, for the responsibility is theirs.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Certainly; and we want the responsibility.

I am in entire accord with the gentleman's views with regard to the rule. I think it is the most asinine thing the House has ever done. I asked the gentleman how much support we could expect from his side, but I failed to find out from him if there were gentlemen on that side who are ready to join those of us on this side who wish to act for the benefit of orderly procedure by amending this rule.

Mr. RICH. In connection with the gentleman's statement that this was an asinine rule, the gentleman himself voted for it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not vote for it.

Mr. RICH. I have before me the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for December 8, 1931. On the roll call appearing at page 82, there were 227 yeas recorded for the rule and one of the Members recorded as voting "yea" is Mr. McDUFFIE. I presume that means the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. McDUFFIE. That is my name. I dislike to challenge the RECORD, but I opposed the rule in caucus and have opposed it ever since it was first suggested. Even if I did vote for it [laughter]—and I now have no recollection of having done so, and I do not believe I did so.

Those of us who have seen its operation, being anxious to preserve the welfare of this side of the legislative branch of the Government wish to see the rule amended. May I ask the gentleman frankly if he thinks we could get support from his side to do away with this rule?

Mr. RICH. I certainly admire the gentleman's attitude. I have the greatest respect for the gentleman from Alabama. I have always come to the conclusion in my life that a wise man changes his mind and a fool never. When you find out that you did something wrong you ought to right a wrong. So far as the Republican Party, the minority Members on this side are concerned, I can speak for only one Member. I may say that I have never been tied down by anybody for anything. I have never made a promise of any kind to anybody, and I do not intend to unless I think within my own mind and conscience that it is the right thing. I can assure the gentleman that I will secure all the votes that I can from Republicans to help amend this rule.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman is a very rare Republican.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLARD. It is quite possible that the gentleman from Alabama may have voted one way in the caucus but was bound by the caucus in voting in the House, which the RECORD shows.

Mr. RICH. I may say in that connection that the members of the Democratic Party are putting through legislation that they do not know what they are voting for. In connection with the Taylor bill that we had here last week they were like a bunch of sheep trying to put through section 13 which was added to the bill. The Committee on Public Lands knew nothing about the section. The only men that knew anything about section 13 was Mr. Wallace of the Department of Agriculture, Mr. Ickes of the Department of the Interior, and Mr. DeRouen, chairman of the committee. The committee never had an opportunity to discuss section 13, and because the chairman of the committee stated that it ought to be enacted into law why they filed down from this side of the House and put that section to the bill when it was detrimental to the members of the Democratic Party and they will find that out later. We should have stated to the departments who should be responsible for administrating the grazing on public lands.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman, in the course of his remarks, accused the Democrats of playing politics and the Republicans of not doing so.

Mr. RICH. I did not say any such thing.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman inferred that we played politics. I am willing to admit the gentleman is right; we do play politics on the Democratic side, but it is playing politics for the people; and when 145 Representatives of the people want to get action on a bill they should be entitled to get that action.

Mr. RICH. I do not say that the Democratic Party are the only ones that play politics. I am sorry to admit that too much politics is played by both parties; but I would say the Democrats are past masters in the art.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, no attitude, of his many attitudes, since he assumed the high and solemn duties of Chief Executive and savior of this Nation and its peoples, since he demanded—and received—the despotic power in which today he is clothed, has so disappointed me, and, I venture, has so disappointed his other friends, his supporters, and the millions who have found their hope for the future and their patience for the present in the vibrant promises of "the more abundant life", the "good neighbor", the "scourging of the money changers from the temple", as Mr. Roosevelt's attitude, as announced by the press, concerning the proposal in the McLeod bill to restore to the rightful owners nearly two billions of deposits now frozen in the closed banks of America, in part, by the direct action of the President.

According to reports of a conference held on the day of his return from his vacation by the Chief Executive with Washington press correspondents, the President in a somewhat jesting manner disposed of the proposal for the Government to take over the assets of the closed banks, restore to the rightful owners of the deposits frozen in those banks, that money they so desperately need.

In that jestful moment Franklin Delano Roosevelt, President of these United States, hope of a desperate and fearful populace, wielder of the most autocratic power ever vested in a Chief Executive of this Nation, literal possessor of despotic power over the fortunes, the possessions, the health, almost the very lives of one hundred and twenty-five millions of people, in the greatest Nation of former freemen ever devised by the mind of man, in that moment, I say, he disposed of the hopes of millions of desperate, want-ridden, gaunt, and agonized men, women, and children whose all, impounded, by order of the President, in banks which they believed, and had a right to believe, were safe and sound, remains today impounded. Impounded, if you please, while bank officers, conservators, receivers, and receivers' attorneys are reaping rich salaries being paid out of the assets of those closed banks, the while the rightful owners of those moneys can get no word, no tidings of what is being done with and to their savings.

Nearly two billions of money belonging to citizens of this Republic remain frozen by order of the President in these closed banks and in banks closed before the Executive action. That nearly two billions of money withheld from the owners thereof represents the self-denial, the lifelong toil, the careful saving, the intelligent thrift, the sweat and sacrifice of millions of our citizens. In that nearly two billions of frozen deposits are imprisoned the present and the future welfare of widows, orphans, of aged and aging men and women who have saved for a lifetime so that as the sun of their mortal day sinks slowly but surely toward the western horizon, and the twilight of advancing years gently settles over their silvered heads they might know peace, security, freedom from the fear that they might have to eat the bitter bread of charity.

Imprisoned in the icy folds of those bank-frozen billions are the insurance funds, the savings, the investments left as the tokens of tenderest love by departed fathers and mothers who planned and saved and strove and sacrificed that the gentle touch of their affection might remain as they journeyed forth into the vastness of an unknown eternity to bless their loved ones left here waving them a tearful adieu on their journey from the shores of mortal experience.

Why, Mr. Chairman, thousands of those citizens, whose funds are thus frozen in the banks, are in the pitiful bread lines which wind their slow and tortuous course each day to the soup kitchens.

Why, sir, thousands of those citizens who believed, and rightfully believed, they had saved and sacrificed successfully to attain a competence for their old age are today eating the bitter bread of charity.

Millions of those citizens, Mr. Chairman, are dragging their weary days out in the midst of stark tragedy, agony of mind, long and countless nights of fitful tossing in fear and desperation, wondering how they will fare in the future, with their all held in the icy clasp of frozen bank deposits. Who, sir, can venture to gage the depths of human agony, fear, and tragedy into which these millions of citizens, through no fault of their own, were plunged by a stroke of the President's pen when he closed the banks of America? Who, sir, can explain to these millions of citizens that the banks were closed by the President "to protect and conserve", as he declared at the time, "the deposits in the banks for their owners", and yet answer their pitiful plea as to why their deposits, instead of being conserved to them, are being slowly but surely consumed in the salaries and expenses of the conservators? Who, sir, can explain to them why it is that, while the deposits of other citizens are now guaranteed by this Government, they, and they alone, must pay the fearful price of poverty and reap the starkly tragic toll of gaunt want?

Who, Mr. Chairman, can explain on any grounds of justice, economic expediency, or good neighborliness to those tragic victims of the closed banks, why it is that we must pour out billions to the railroads, that their bad investments may be liquidated; to insurance companies, to employees in the forests, to everybody; the young, the able, the robust, the banker in his mahogany offices, the railroad official in his palatial quarters, the P.W.A., the C.W.A., the C.C.C., the A.A.A., but yet blast the hopes and refuse the pleas of millions, a large percentage of whom are aged, gray, unable longer to toil, unable longer to meet the struggles in a selfish world?

Who, Mr. Chairman, among us here today can venture to gage the measure of hurt to the hearts of these millions of Americans, as the President's refusal to relieve the most fearful tragedy of their lives rings in their ears? Who, sir, can venture here today to measure the depth of the wound sent by that refusal into the very quivering souls of millions of America's best men and women, and defenseless children—victims of a Presidential order which imprisoned their all in the icy grip of frozen assets—and without a word of explanation, has kept that all so imprisoned?

Those frozen deposits, Mr. Chairman, are the tragic summation of crushing misfortune to millions of good Americans.

Those frozen assets may not have seemed tragic to the President, but they are the ever-present specter of hunger, want, humiliation, and starvation to thousands and thousands of the finest type of citizenship ever produced in this "home of the brave and land of the free." God save the mark!

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. As I understood the gentleman's statement he said that it would require about $2,000,000,000 to liquidate these deposits.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Approximately that, I understand.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does that include deposits in banks that are nonmembers of the Federal Reserve System?

Mr. WOODRUFF. That will, of course, depend entirely on the form of the bill as it becomes law. I may say that the original McLeod bill provided that the entire amount of deposits in national banks should be paid depositors. That in itself, I understand, would approximate $2,000,000,000. Ninety-six and one half percent of the depositors with money frozen in closed banks are made up of those with $2,500 or less in those banks.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Can the gentleman give an estimate of how much will be required to take care of the deposits in nonmember banks?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I am of the opinion that if the bill is amended to pay in full deposits in both national and State banks not in excess of $2,500, graduating the amount above that which shall be paid, that $2,000,000,000, or approximately that sum, will be necessary.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I am glad to yield to my colleague from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. As the author of the bill which has been substituted in the Banking and Currency Committee for the McLeod bill, I may say that Mr. PRALL, chairman of the subcommittee, has an estimate that the cost would be about $700,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I am very happy to have that statement from my colleague from Michigan and I thank him for his contribution to this discussion, and hope he is correct, although I seriously doubt the accuracy of the prediction of the chairman of the subcommittee which considered the bill.

Those frozen assets—nearly two billions of them, sir—may seem but an incident of depression to some, but those impounded deposits are the epitomy of human grief and fear and tragedy to millions of our finest types of men and women in America. Who, I repeat, can venture to measure the wound to them in the attitude of the President toward their dire misfortune and their stark want?

"I'm a tough guy. I learned things from the sharks and barracudas." So spoke the President to the delegation of adoring Members of the Congress and the Marine Band, glorious in crimson, as they met him at the railroad station. And one almost wonders, Mr. Chairman, whether there was in that remark, more than the mere jocularity of an idle jest made in a moment of exuberance, upon finding a delegation of adoring admirers awaiting with a band in crimson and gold. One wonders, when one ponders that refusal of a few hours later the same day, crushing the last hope of millions of fear-stricken and want-ridden victims of the closed banks. Truly the art of so lightly dismissing the hopes, the fears, the agony, and the tragedy of millions of American men, women, and children might well have been learned from the sharks and the barracudas.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that I have been more profoundly disappointed by this attitude of Franklin Delano Roosevelt than I have at anything that has happened in American life and affairs since he has been the Chief Executive. I believe the President's closest and most loyal admirers must be disappointed as I am.

When I ponder the high, idealistic, warm, human, protestations of Mr. Roosevelt, his assurances of protecting the weak against the strong, his promises that the money changers should be driven from the temple, his vibrant voicing of the philosophy of the good neighbor, his solemn declaration that he was closing the banks to conserve the deposits for their rightful owners, his demands for autocratic power that he might see that even-handed justice was dispensed to every individual of this great Nation, his further demands for more power and still more power—which this Congress has readily and willingly, aye, eagerly granted him—I say, when I ponder those facts, when I recall the noble sentiments he expressed outside this historic edifice in his inaugural address, the beautiful prayer to Almighty God which crowned so fittingly the expression of such noble sentiments—I find myself utterly unable to reconcile his refusal to relieve the misery, the fears, the want, the privation, the bitter humiliation of millions of our finest men and women and children of this land. To me it is an utterly incomprehensible reversal of everything Franklin Delano Roosevelt has voiced in the past, everything he has claimed to stand for, everything he has typified to a Nation whose citizens today still stand on the perilous edge of a yawning precipice, into the darkness and social chaos of which a thrust, the like of that which the President has made into the hearts and the hopes of millions of Americans, might easily plunge us.

I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, that in the person of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, into his keeping, because of the high spiritual ideals he has voiced, the high spiritual promises he has made, are centered the hopes of this people; to him is confided the greatest, most despotic, most autocratic power ever vested in any individual in any high office since this land was wrested from the greedy grasp of an absentee ruler and, through the blood and agony of our fathers, molded into the greatest social organization, under the greatest charter of human rights—the Constitution—ever devised by man. And I want to say also that the hope, the confidence, the idealistic adoration which has been given to this man, along with this despotic power, if shattered by misguided or mistaken decisions may well result in social chaos and serious consequences. America has been patient, sir. Our people have been long suffering and majestic in their exercise of self-control. They have believed the promises of Mr. Roosevelt. To them he is their champion, their savior, their hope, and I warn this Congress and this country that that hope, that confidence, that—I am tempted to say—idolatry of the President by our people is something not to be trifled with, not to be endangered, not to be treated lightly. America cannot suffer another loss of confidence in her leaders and survive social disorder.

This question, Mr. Chairman, is not one merely of sentiment. This question, sir, is not one which can be settled and dismissed on the basis of granting or of refusing a favor. The issues here involved are fundamental issues of government, of moral responsibility, of sheer justice, and this question has not been and cannot be settled by Mr. Roosevelt, or by any other official nor by any group of officials, until it has been settled rightly, justly, equitably, and decently.

That the Government does have resting upon it a profound moral obligation to restore these billions of dollars to the rightful owners, no man can justly deny.

Why, sir, have we so soon forgotten the hymn of hate which swept the press of this country for 2 years previous to Mr. Roosevelt's inauguration against the so-called "hoarders"? The Government officials, from Mr. Hoover down, pleaded, demanded, threatened, cajoled the people to cease withdrawing their money from the banks, to take their money out of hiding, and put it in the banks. Mr. Hoover himself assured the people the banks were sound. Mr. Coolidge, then ex-President, in a scathing denunciation of so-called "hoarders", demanded that, as a part of good citizenship, as a part of patriotism, the people should put their money in the banks, and should keep their money in the banks. The Secretary of the Treasury and innumerable other officials of the Treasury and other departments of the Government gave out interviews in the press, over the radio, in every way by which the people might be reached; Government officials, bankers, editors, industrialists—all demanded, on the grounds of good citizenship, on the grounds of patriotism, that the citizens should keep their money in these banks, which were declared over and over again to be sound. Why, sir, that drive, that campaign, to force the citizens to put their money into banks reached a crescendo comparable to the war-time drive in the sale of Liberty bonds. So-called "hoarders" were branded as slackers.

It was proposed in this Congress and was urged by some Government officials that an act be passed making it a crime punishable by heavy fine and imprisonment for anybody to voice or to whisper or to even hint that any banking institution might not be as sound as the Rock of Gibraltar. Those facts are not buried in the mists and hysteria of a war time of nearly two decades ago. They are facts of less than 3 years ago. They are facts of yesterday, and they cannot be dismissed by a jest by the President or by anybody else.

What was the true situation while this hymn of hate, this campaign of villification, this deluge of ridicule, this avalanche of demands by Government officials and others was beating about the heads of the citizens. Why, sir, in those very days, when Government officials were demanding, pleading, threatening, cajoling the citizens to have faith in the banks—in those very days, I say, those banks were unsound—and the Government officials knew it. Those banks were issuing false statements—and the Government officials knew it. We have since learned through the testimony of the Government officials themselves that bank inspectors were being instructed to permit banks to operate, to accept deposits, to make false reports, when those banks were known to be insolvent. Those are the facts, sir, and they cannot be waved aside.

O Mr. Chairman, it will be of no avail to say that a Republican administration was in power when that was done! Those officials were Government officials, not merely Republican officials, just as Franklin Delano Roosevelt is the Chief Executive of all the people, not merely of the Democrats. It will be of no avail, I say, to try to befog this issue by partisan political arguments. Democrats, Republicans, men of all parties, men of all creeds, helped to carry on that campaign to force the people to put their money in the banks. Officials, laymen, pulpit, press—they all urged that governmental supervision of the national banks, that Federal Reserve supervision of member banks, that State supervision of State banks—were the guaranties that the banks were sound. Members of Congress of both political parties, clearing-house associations—all assured these citizens who now fill the bread lines, who are now pauperized, who now are losing their homes, who now are living out their days in the agony of a base betrayal which has frozen their money in locked banks—that the banks were safe. And, in those very hours, Government officials knew—mark you that statement—Government officials knew, banking officials knew, clearing-house authorities knew that many of those banks were unsound, unsafe! They knew then that the legend, "national bank", spread in gold letters across the front of many financial institutions as the guaranty of strict governmental supervision and of soundness, were a falsity and a hollow mockery. Those facts cannot be denied.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does the gentleman mean to say that Government officials knew as a fact that these banks were unsound? Was not the situation that it was a period during which there was great uncertainty as to values, when it was practically impossible to determine what the value of bank paper was, because no man in the world could determine whether the man who made the paper or the corporation back of it was solvent or insolvent, and that what the Government officials did was merely to give the banks the benefit of the doubt?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Yes; I mean to say Government officials did know banks were unsound. I recognize the fact that there were mitigating circumstances, that those were perilous times in this country, and banking was of uncertain stability, but, nevertheless, in spite of all the things the gentleman states, it is a matter of record before committees of Congress that the statements I have made are true; and may I remind the gentleman that no matter what the banking situation was, and no matter what combination of circumstances may seem to justify Government officials misleading the people of this country, the depositors were not to blame. We cannot charge them with any part of this responsibility.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I do not believe the gentleman should put into the RECORD a statement charging the Government with responsibility, either.

Mr. WOODRUFF. That is a matter of opinion only.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. The truth of the matter is, of course, that hindsight is always better than foresight. During that period it was often impossible to determine the value of the assets of a bank. Mistakes were made. Instead of working out of the economic depression and effecting a recovery, we went in deeper; but there was no man in the world who could have anticipated it at that time.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman says mistakes were made. Were the mistakes made by the depositors who believed these Government officials and who because of their belief either left their money in the banks or returned it to the banks.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. The mistake was made both by the depositors and by Government officials.

Mr. WOODRUFF. May I ask the gentleman from Minnesota if he approves the loans that have been made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the banks, to the railroads, and to the insurance companies?

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. To make a direct answer to the question would require a statement that would be too sweeping.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I am not asking a question that requires a speech in response. I am asking the gentleman for a "yes" or "no" answer. Does the gentleman believe that the loans to the banks, to the railroads, and to the insurance companies have been justified?

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I submit that the gentleman's question does not permit of a "yes" or "no" answer. Some of the loans were justified and some may not have been justified. I am, of course, not personally familiar with the details of all the loans.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Without doubt, if the bill I am discussing should become law, the assets in some banks would more than pay the depositors of those banks. The assets of other banks would not be sufficient for this purpose. Loans—because after all that is what the proposed payments amount to—would be both good and bad, as have been the loans the gentleman refers to.

There seems to be no hesitancy on the part of the present administration to continue to meet such demands as seem necessary from the banks, the railroads, and the insurance companies for loans to them. I am not criticizing this policy. I do not want the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTIANSON] or anyone else to gather from what I am saying that I consider the activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as being anything other than necessary. I do not want the gentleman to mistake me on that; but I disagree with the gentleman, I can see, about this matter. Inasmuch as we have made loans to these business organizations, and inasmuch as necessarily there must be, in due course of time, losses connected with those loans, and as a result of those loans, and as the question involved in this proposal to pay the depositors is nothing more or less than a loan extended on security—not the best, perhaps, but on security—and as we have some justification for some degree of optimism as to the future of this country, we have reason to expect that during the better days to come these securities, which today do not have the value we may wish they might have, will acquire a value which will make the loss to the Government comparatively small as a result of such loans.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does the gentleman believe, then, in view of the Securities Regulation Act of 1933, that if the Government should hold out to investors the belief or the hope that certain securities are good, and this in fact should turn out not to be the fact, for that reason the Federal Government would be assuming a responsibility to reimburse these investors?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman would beguile me from a further discussion of the matter to which I am directing my remarks. He is opening up new avenues of discussion which neither time nor inclination will permit me to follow. The question he raises is not included in the matter before us.

To now resume the tenor of my remarks, the moral responsibility of this Government—notwithstanding what my friend from Minnesota has had to say—with respect to these millions of citizens whose all is frozen in the closed banks is there. It cannot justly be evaded. It cannot be waved aside. Until the grievous wrong done these millions of good citizens is righted these facts will stand as the record of the basest betrayal of the people by their Government and their leaders that ever blotched and smutted the pages of this great Republic.

The action proposed in the McLeod bill or the Brown bill, I will say to my colleague from Michigan, if that bill is the one finally enacted, is not to make a gift to these people.

It is not a measure to pay lobster losses or private debts. It is a measure of rightful restitution to these citizens of what is justly theirs; of money which officials of this Government helped to lure into banks which they knew were unsound; banks which the Government was charged with the responsibility of seeing were sound—a responsibility that was basely and wantonly betrayed and evaded. And again, I say, sir, that responsibility, that moral duty, to restore to these despoiled millions of citizens the money that is rightfully theirs cannot be finally disposed of until justice is done.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DITTER. I yield the gentleman 8 additional minutes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I yield.

Mr. RICH. How would the gentleman suggest that the Government take over the assets of all these banks that have failed, when some have been partly liquidated and the good assets sold? Does the gentleman think that the taxpayers of this country should come in and assume the responsibility of the burdens that might be placed upon them because of the desire of Members of Congress to have the Government pay all of these deposits?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I assume, I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania, that if he has been listening to my remarks, he must have long ago come to the conclusion that I am in favor of just that. The taxpayers will find it necessary to provide the funds with which to pay the losses on the loans of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. They must eventually pay the expenses and the expenditures of all the different alphabetical activities now being indulged in. The largest eventual loss to the Treasury which so far as I know has been predicted as a result of this legislation is $300,000,000, the exact sum of the first appropriation for the C.C.C. That appropriation assisted 300,000 young men and their families. This legislation would extend needed relief to 10,000,000 worthy men and women, and through them to those dependent upon them.

Turning for a moment to the economic side of this grave and portentious question, I ask by what process of reasoning anyone can arrive at the conclusion that two billions of frozen bank deposits, if released, would not contribute just as much to renewed purchasing power of our people as two billions handed to the railroads, as two billions handed to banketeers, as two billions spent in public works, as two billions spent in reforestation, and in the C.W.A.? Mark you, sir, I am not decrying these various efforts at national economic rehabilitation! I am asking by what process of reasoning two billions, or nearly two billions of dollars now frozen in bank deposits, if released, can be considered as of less value in aiding restoration of purchasing power in America than the two billions here and the two billions there, and the two billions yonder, being poured out in such unstinted measure by the President in efforts to increase purchasing power and restore prosperity.

I have said I am profoundly disappointed by the President's attitude toward the money belonging to millions of good Americans now locked in the icy grip of frozen bank deposits, the while icy fear grips at the hearts of bereft men and women. This is so grave that it goes beyond any personal criticism of merely an individual. Franklin Delano Roosevelt is not merely an individual. By the very force of circumstances, by his very promises, by the very desperation of this Nation and its peoples, he cannot for one single moment be merely an individual. Not one word, not one act, not one wave of his hand, not one chuckle of his can be merely individual. He typifies the hope, the salvation, the bulwark against ruin and social chaos, to the American people. Therefore, he should—and must—weigh every word, every chuckle, every gesture, by that measure. Not for one minute of one hour of his days can he be merely an individual.

He assumed, and willingly, the role of savior of this country, champion of the oppressed, guarantor of even justice to all. He wanted to be the knight in armor who would joust with the dragon of ruin and disorder, and with his lance of high ideals and purposes strengthened by autocratic power, asked for by him and given to him by this Congress, representing a sorely oppressed people, slay that monstrous menace of want and riot and revolution. He must weigh his words and gestures; he must chart his course and consider his acts accordingly. More than any other individual in this land, more than any official in this Republic, more than all of us here, perhaps, he holds and wields the power for good or ill to this Nation in his words, his gestures, his attitudes, his states of mind.

In all fairness, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that as I recall the vibrant expressions of high spiritual purposes sent ringing broadcast through this land time and again, sent through medium of linotype and printing press, sent through the avenue of a book, by the President, I simply cannot believe Mr. Roosevelt could have meant to jest about the stark tragedy wrought in the lives of millions of our best citizens by those frozen bank deposits. I want to say, frankly and fairly, that I can find the only explanation of Mr. Roosevelt's amazing and unbelievable attitude and expressions concerning this tragic matter in his recent vacation and his return to the adulation of a congressional delegation, the martial strains of "Hail to the Chief"; it must have been that in the exuberance of it all this kindly man, who has voiced so many beautiful and noble sentiments, whose concern, as expressed by him, has been always for the lowly and the stricken—it must have been that he forgot for the moment his high destiny, the high place he holds in the hearts of his countrymen, the vast power for good or ill he wields, the stark and fearful tragedy today engulfing millions of citizens whose all is denied them behind the doors of locked banks. He must for the moment have forgotten. No other explanation of this amazing and disheartening change of sentiment can I find.

But, sir, whether it was in a moment of exuberance, whether it was in a moment of trying to be merely an individual, the terrible fact remains that Franklin Delano Roosevelt, by one airy wave of his hand, damned the McLeod bill; and in that same instant he damned the hopes and confirmed the fears and fastened more tightly the nooses of tragedy, hunger, lost homes, bitter charity, fear, agony, sleepless nights about the lives of millions of America's best men and women. I cannot but feel that the President owes it to these millions of betrayed and ruined depositors to unsay what he has said, to reconsider his decision, to withdraw his objections to the McLeod bill.

But one conclusion can be reached about the tactics employed by the committee of this House in charge of the McLeod bill. It is that the committee fears to give the Congress, the peoples' representatives, a chance to vote on the proposal. Added to that now the President's words and attitude damn irretrievably the hopes of these millions of American men and women getting their money, unless Mr. Roosevelt changes his views expressed on that fateful Friday the 13th. It cannot be that he means to turn his back upon these pleading millions—pleading for the restoration of that which is rightfully theirs. It must be the President will see this matter in a more kindly vein and will send the word to this Congress to give the peoples' representatives a chance to vote on the McLeod measure. If he does not, if he persists in his refusal to right one of this Nation's most terrible tragedies, then America's idol has fallen and the people are, indeed, bereft of hope. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may require, not exceeding an hour.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, our committee has brought you one of the best appropriation bills for the District of Columbia that has been before the Congress for several years.

While we have tried to eliminate all waste and extravagance and opportunity for graft, and have reduced it $817,761 below the President's Budget estimates, we have nevertheless granted to the District of Columbia for the next fiscal year the sum of $2,261,248.94 more than it received for the present fiscal year.

I feel sure that I express the sentiment of all of the Members of this House when I say that we cannot say too much in praise of the splendid work our distinguished colleague from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], as chairman of the subcommittee handling this bill, has diligently and efficiently performed in its careful preparation. He devoted to it weeks of study and consideration. During the tedious days he spent in holding the hearings, he was patient and courteous, yet firm and exacting, in seeing to it that no stone was left unturned in bringing to light all pertinent information. All of us regret exceedingly that the injuries he received in the unfortunate automobile accident prevent him from handling this bill on the floor, and we wish for him a speedy recovery. [Applause.] CLARENCE CANNON is one of the ablest parliamentarians in this House. I deem him one of the most valuable Members we have in Congress. I consider it an honor to serve under him on this subcommittee. I wish that he were here to take charge of his own bill.

I want also to commend our goods friends, new Members, Mr. JACOBSEN, of Iowa, Mr. DITTER, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. POWERS, of New Jersey, who have done splendid work. I think that this bill will withstand the criticism of the Members of this House. I now want to use my time in speaking of my own service here.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and insert therein certain documents and excerpts that I wish to refer to in my speech.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am serving here nearly 2,000 miles away from my constituents. They cannot be here to watch us work. They have no first-hand knowledge of what we do, or do not, accomplish for them. Since we convened this session, early last January, I have been on a continual grind, working about 16 hours per day. I receive and answer daily 20 times as much mail as Members here formerly received from their districts. I daily fill numerous appointments with departments. I have been very busy helping to hold important hearings on some very important supply bills involving hundreds of millions of dollars. During every session of this House I am active here on this floor, carefully watching all legislation.

PEOPLE DEPENDENT ON PRESS

Our constituents know about what we do here only from what they see in the newspapers. The very few who receive the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD can gain from it only a faint idea of the nature and scope of our duties in Congress. The United States Government is the biggest and most ponderous business institution in the world. It has agencies and interests in every foreign country. To serve well here it is necessary for a Member to have intimate knowledge of the nature, scope, and necessities of every department, bureau, commission, independent office, and agency, both domestic and foreign, and to gain this knowledge requires intense study, investigation, and practical experience, for many years. And most of this knowledge can be acquired only when Congress is not in session. The only news about Congress that the people back home get is whatever the press boys in the gallery see fit to send out from Washington over the wires.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. RICH. If the people back home in the gentleman's home in Texas knew how hard he was working, not only on the floor of the House during the sessions of the day, but at night, it must give those citizens great satisfaction to know that fact, and those people back home will never believe the Hearst newspapers but will take the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as their guide. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. I thank my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania. Coming from that side of the aisle, I especially appreciate it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I suggest to the gentleman from Texas that he send a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of last week to his constituents and let them see that the gentleman from Texas led the fight that saved the Government $12,000,000 on the Minnesota fire bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I thank my good friend from Missouri for his suggestion. When what we do here is misrepresented at home by designing politicians who are seeking the positions we hold, we have the right to present our side, and let our constituents have all the facts so they may pass on the issues intelligently.

SENSATIONAL DEEMED OF GREATEST IMPORTANCE

The press boys in the gallery always report the snarls, and jabs, and fights, and spirited repartee over inconsequential incidents, because they believe their readers demand the sensational, but the earnest important efforts exerted on this floor to pass beneficial legislation, or to stop and kill improper bills, are rarely ever mentioned.

For instance, last week, when the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FOULKES], who had been given only 2 minutes to speak since he became a Member of Congress, requested permission to speak 5 minutes, his request was denied, and in defense of his rights I insisted that, although he was a new Member, he was entitled to 5 minutes, and I prevented the older Members there from passing their private bills, and forced the House to adjourn, in order to force the time to be promised him the next day. This proceeding, in no way important to the people, was sent out in full over the wires, and it was given an unwarranted lot of space in the newspapers. But when on April 4, 1934, I led the fight against the Minnesota fire bill, which in every session since 1924 I have killed, and which was mentioned a few minutes ago by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], a bill that would have paid $10,000,000 to private claimants on a fire occurring in 1918, for which—though it was not legally responsible—the Government then settled with them in full and paid them $13,000,000 in cash, and they executed releases to the Government acknowledging that they accepted the $13,000,000 in full settlement of all claims they had against the United States, and now, years after, they tried to dig the Government for another $10,000,000, and to defeat this bill on the final vote, April 5, 1934, it was necessary for me to employ outsiders at my own expense and to work my office force most of the preceding night mailing a letter to all of the 434 Congressmen, advising them of the nature of the bill, and that the final vote on it would come the first thing Thursday, not one word about killing this expensive bill was sent out to my district, as the saving of this $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 was deemed unimportant by the press gallery, as it was not sensational news. Yet by killing this one bill I saved enough money to pay my salary and the salaries of my office employees for 769 years.

And last week, Mr. Chairman, by objecting to bad bills and preventing them from being passed I saved $30,859.28 by stopping H.R. 2558; and saved $18,704.89 by stopping H.R. 2764, and saved millions of dollars by thus stopping the bad precedent its passage would have set, that would have caused thousands of new claims to be filed against the Government; and saved $11,172.15 by stopping H.R. 3236, and by so doing prevented another bad precedent from being established that would have cost our Government millions of dollars; and saved $5,000 by amending and reducing H.R. 5405, and saved $20,000 by stopping H.R. 5588, and saved $62,340.65 by stopping H.R. 4067. By objections yesterday I stopped a $3,250 junket to Rome, Italy, another bill that would cost $40,000 annually for all time to come, and a $90,000 junket to Turkey. Yet not one word about all of the hard work I had done in preparing to stop these bad bills and the saving of these various sums of money for the taxpayers of this Nation was sent to the Texas papers by the press boys in the gallery, as they did not consider same sensational.

SPECIAL PRESS PETS

Members who will wear the press yoke, who will take orders from the press, and who will obey the big press mandates, have every little insignificant act of theirs sent out with headlines and played up on the front page; but Members here who think for themselves, who act for themselves, who refuse to take orders from the big press, and who refuse to kowtow to the reporters in the press gallery, never have anything they do mentioned except in a garbled and derogatory way. Our friendly home papers in our district that would like to mention our work are dependent absolutely on what the news agencies are willing to send them. When the press boys do not want to send them anything, they do not get it. And when you remember that the usually reliable Associated Press has 62 reporters accredited to it in the press gallery, all with different personalities and viewpoints, who take turns in reporting the proceedings, you can then realize that the news sent out, to a more or less extent, is dependent upon the personality, bias, prejudice, and viewslant of the particular reporter who happens to be on duty at the time.

CHEAP SKATES AND PIMPS

In addition to the reputable press and news agencies and reporters, there is always to be found around Congress and State legislatures some so-called "publicity agents", who for pay will write anything one wants written. For pay they will agree to write and get published in the papers flowery articles about Members or attacks upon their opponents. Many of them have offered me their services. I will not even allow them to come in my office. Since I have been in public life I have never yet paid one dollar to any publicity agent to write anything about me, and I never will. I have made many of them mad by refusing to talk to them.

HIGH-CLASS JOURNALISTS

There are many newspaper men of high character who cannot be bought. You have not enough money to buy praise from men like Frederic William Wile, or Arthur Brisbane, or David Lawrence, or William P. Kennedy, or Hugh Nugent Fitzgerald, or Max Bentley. You could not bribe them to malign your enemies. Their code of ethics prints the news regardless, and gives praise where praise is due and censures when censure is deserved.

SKUNKS LIKE RAYMOND BROOKS

Raymond Brooks is a dirty little rat at Austin, who for several years has been pimping around the Texas Legislature. When dirty work is to be done, he does it. He will write any kind of an article he is paid to write. He is a detestable little cheap skate. For $1.97 he would sing the praise of the most undeserving. For $1.99 Raymond Brooks would malign the President. He is a despicable publicity pimp.

AMBUSHING ME FROM ABILENE

In a hired attempt to injure me, Raymond Brooks went to Abilene on March 21, 1934. He visited the Reporter-News office. He did not get their viewpoint, because they were my loyal friends. He did not mention me. He did not inquire about my chances for reelection. His only inquiry was about the race in Texas for Governor. Yet from my home city, where my good friends abound, he sent out a malicious article dated "Abilene, March 21, 1934", which he published in the Austin American, bemeaning me and eulogizing my opponents, and predicting my defeat, falsely asserting that Abilene people "were keenly enlivened over the prospect of sweeping TOM BLANTON out of Congress this year." He failed, however, to disguise his source of information. Under the headline "Wagstaff Quitting" he said: "Carl Hammond (meaning Hamlin), district judge and World War veteran, and Representative Oscar F. Chastain are already pouring it on BLANTON", and then he said "R. M. Wagstaff has decided he has had enough of the legislature, and will retire."

MACHINE GUNNING ME FROM CISCO

And from Cisco that same day, dated "Cisco, March 21, 1934", Raymond Brooks published in the Austin American an additional attack upon me, again eulogizing my opponents, and predicting my defeat. After glowingly asserting "how very popular Oscar Chastain was in that county" (Eastland) he said that Chastain "is strong in BLANTON'S home city." He showed that he did not even know Hamlin, for again he called him "Hammond." He said: "Judge Carl Hammond (meaning Hamlin) has a challenging political background, and a record of success in all his races, is a son of a former Missouri Congressman, is a World War veteran, and is extremely popular with veterans and with organized labor." His last two words let the cat out of the bag. They show who probably were among those who employed him and sent him to Abilene and Cisco.

ORGANIZED GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

It will be remembered that there are 600,000 strongly organized Government employees, many of whom are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, who last fall, 3 months before Congress convened, tried to get me to pledge my vote to restore the cuts we had made in all salaries.

When I refused they threatened that they would defeat me. I led the fight here against restoring full salaries. The law making cuts expires July 1. President Roosevelt agreed that he would restore part of the cuts. But unless Congress passed a law before July 1, continuing that part of the cuts the President refused to restore, all cuts would expire on July 1, and all salaries would then be fully restored. These organized employees hoped that no law would be passed before July 1. They rejoiced when President Roosevelt, because of veterans' provisions, vetoed the bill continuing part cuts, but I helped to pass this bill over the President's veto, which prevents such cuts from expiring July 1; and these organized Government employees are still fighting me because I helped to prevent the old salaries from being restored in full. I imagine their influence had something to do with sending Raymond Brooks to Abiline and Cisco.

RETIRED OFFICERS' LOBBY

I helped to cause over 4,800 emergency officers who wrongfully had gotten themselves retired on big pay, ranging from $150 to $500 per month for life, to be dropped from the rolls and their retired pay taken from them, because numerous boards held they were not in any way disabled from service. They were trying to get back on the rolls and to have their pay restored. They had a strong influential lobby here working for them. There were well-to-do doctors and well-to-do lawyers and judges and other officials represented by this lobby. I opposed them at every turn. One important official, who had drawn $240 per month retired pay until we cut him off, runs an influential newspaper here with circulation all over the United States. They succeeded in getting a Senate amendment passed placing them back on the rolls. I helped to kill this amendment, and we kept them off.

During much of the time for the last 13 years he has been district judge Carl O. Hamlin drew $5,000 salary from the State, and during part of said time he also drew $150 per month retired pay from the Government, presumed to be based upon service-connected disabilities, when he was never out of the United States during the war. He was dropped, and several boards have held that he has no service disability, yet he has been trying to get back on the rolls. So I imagine that this retired officers' lobby also may have been helpful in causing Raymond Brooks to go to Abilene and Cisco to specially eulogize Carl Hamlin, whose name Brooks did not even know, as he called him "Hammond."

In his attack sent from Cisco, Brooks falsely asserted that my constituents had defeated me and kept me out of Congress for a while when he knew that I was out because I ran for the Senate; and against a field of 6 prominent candidates, I carried 79 counties in Texas and my district gave me a tremendous majority over all candidates.

Raymond Brooks caused his Cisco article, dated from "Cisco, March 21", but with "Hammond" changed to "Hamlin", to be published in the Wichita Falls newspaper in its issue of March 23, 1934, because it circulates in a part of my district. But the editor, on the following Sunday, March 25, 1934, in the Wichita Falls Daily Times, threw Raymond Brooks' attack in the wastebasket by publishing the following editorial:

BLANTON

A political writer thinks that Congressman BLANTON, of the Abilene district, is in danger of defeat this year. In that respect, things are running true to form. Always in March and April and May and June of election years, BLANTON is headed straight for the discard. The trouble is, from the viewpoint of those who would like to see him beaten, that July never supports the hopes that have bloomed in the spring, tra-la-la. Always we are told in March that BLANTON'S sun is setting; always the end of July finds it shining brightly as ever.

The people who would like to see BLANTON defeated, and there are quite a few outside of Texas, don't vote in BLANTON'S district. The voters in that part of west Texas keep sending him back, usually by thumping majorities. We have a hunch the primary vote will tell the same old story. His courage cannot be questioned.

SWEETWATER REPORTER FERTILE FIELD

The Sweetwater Daily Reporter and one small weekly are the only two newspapers published in my district that are fighting against me. Everything they say about me is unkind, garbled, and malicious. The other newspapers are fair and just. They never stab me under the belt. Unless urged to do so by my friends, the Sweetwater Reporter never mentions me kindly. Raymond Brooks had no trouble in getting the Sweetwater Reporter to broadcast his political propaganda. In its issue of March 23, 1934, dated from "Cisco, March 21" but with "Hammond" changed to "Hamlin", it spread Brooks' attack all over the bottom of its front page. It did not care whether it was true or not. It did not care whether it was just or unjust. It did not care what Brooks' motive was in writing it. The controlling point was that it maligned me, hence the Sweetwater Reporter rejoiced in carrying it. Then in its Sunday issue, April 1, 1934, it attacked me editorially, falsely stating that I draw "20 cents mileage" when for several years mileage has been cut 25 percent, following a determined fight I have made for years to cut it; and it also falsely stated that I favored restoring pay cuts in Federal salaries, when just the opposite was true, and my vote helped to continue on that part of the pay cuts advocated by President Roosevelt. Then in its issue of April 5, 1934, the Sweetwater Reporter carried a ridiculous—United Press—article asserting that I had denounced labor, without quoting anything I had said. My speech was an endeavor to stop the American Federation of Labor from forcing 250,000 heads of families in the auto industry from striking, such employees being well paid and satisfied, and who did not want to strike. At least 90 percent of the people of Sweetwater will approve all I said in this speech. For last year the Sweetwater Reporter paid the Government only $130.32 for carrying its paper through the mails for a whole year. That is its subsidy. Just to let the Sweetwater people know how very unreliable the United Press and the Sweetwater Reporter are, I am going to have this speech I made on March 20, 1934, against strikes published at my own expense and will later mail them a copy. My constituents have the right to know just what I did say, and not be misled by a garbled account of it in the Sweetwater Reporter, which is nettled because the law grants me the privilege of letting my constituents know what goes on here.

WHAT SOME SWEETWATER PEOPLE SAY ABOUT IT

I have received a letter from a substantial citizen of Sweetwater, who says:

DEAR BLANTON: After all you have done for Sweetwater, I am ashamed of the way Cope treats you in his Reporter. You fulfilled the promise you made to me, Vard, Howard, and your other close friends here and gave Sweetwater the first public building you secured for our district, and you may rest assured that it is appreciated by all the people in Sweetwater who know about it.

Cope came here from San Angelo, and he evidently runs the Reporter on orders from San Angelo. His prejudices don't help Sweetwater. I am in favor of the business men here withdrawing all advertising and support from his paper if he continues to register his spleen against you. Don't let his attitude interfere with giving us the C.C.C. camp you promised me you would locate here this summer.

TRICKERY OF REDATING AND SHIFTING

Then, in an attempt to try to fool the Cisco people, Raymond Brooks redated this same article he had sent out to papers at Austin, Wichita Falls, and Sweetwater, as if emanating from Cisco, dated "Cisco, March 21", to "March 26", and then, newly dated "Austin, March 26", he caused same to be published in the afternoon edition of the Cisco Daily News of March 26, 1934, as if it were a fresh telegraphic dispatch just sent to Cisco from Austin on March 26, when, to fool readers of the other papers, all of this dirty work had been sent out by Raymond Brooks from Cisco on March 21. He had tried to make the readers of the other papers believe that he was in Cisco on March 21 and had checked up the political situation there, and that he had written his article there, and that it was coming from Cisco on March 21 to them over the wires, when he had not been near Manager LaRoche or Editor Butler, of the Cisco Daily News, on March 21. And after he thought this specially prepared political propaganda he had been hired to disseminate had done all the harm it could do me in the other places, he then sent this same unreliable, irresponsible, lying propaganda right back to Cisco, dated from Austin, March 26. The people of Cisco are highly intelligent and will not be so dumb as to fall for it. Of course, he corrected his error in name and changed "Hammond" to "Hamlin" when he published the above in the Cisco News.

JUGGLING MULTIPLIED

Then, on March 29, 1934, Raymond Brooks again changed dates and places respecting this same article and shifted its date line back to Cisco, and, dating it "Cisco, March 29", he or someone for him or Carl Hamlin, got the Breckenridge American, published where Carl Hamlin lives, in its issue of Sunday, April 1, 1934, to spread same all over the bottom of its front page, covering the exact position it had covered in the Sweetwater Reporter. Of course, the error in name had been changed from "Hammond" to "Hamlin." And thus they hoped to fool the good people of Breckenridge into believing that this was a bona fide news item sent out from Cisco on March 29, when the same article had appeared in the Austin American, Wichita Falls Record-News, and Sweetwater Reporter, dated from "Cisco, March 21", and had later appeared in the Cisco Daily News, dated from "Austin, March 26." When they find that out people will quit reading anything they see from Raymond Brooks. He is absolutely unreliable and irresponsible.

NOW PUBLISHING WITHOUT DATING

In last week's Rising Star Record, leaving off the date, but just heading it "By Raymond Brooks, Cisco", this same Raymond Brooks' political propaganda that he originally hatched out on March 21, was carried in full, again appearing on the front page, it being another deliberate attempt to get the good people of Rising Star to believe that this hired opposition and bogus political check-up came from Cisco. I would not be worthy of the confidence of my constituents, or qualified to hold their office, if I permitted this hired juggling to continue unnoticed.

WHAT AN AUSTIN CITIZEN THOUGHT OF IT

The following letter, dated at Austin on March 24, 1934, I received from a substantial citizen of Austin, indicates just how very ridiculous this Raymond Brooks' political propaganda appears to anyone who is posted:

DEAR JUDGE: I am sending you some articles clipped from the Austin American written by Raymond Brooks, one he sent from Abilene, and one from Cisco, both dated March 21. Undoubtedly this is inspired propaganda against you. If his life depended on it, Raymond Brooks could not tell how any one of the numerous precincts in Austin or Travis County, where he lives, will go in the coming primary regarding any candidate or any race. Surely he won't succeed in fooling many people in your counties.

His reference to Oscar Chastain amused me greatly. Oscar was a joke here and in the legislature didn't know what it was all about, and he certainly wouldn't know what it was all about in Washington. After the redistricting, Oscar bragged here about his framing you, and said that Wagstaff from your Abilene district didn't like you because you had beaten Wagstaff's father for Congress, and that Wagstaff had helped him take 10 of your best counties away from you, and had added 3 new counties in which Oscar was well acquainted, and that he thus had his election and your defeat assured. I don't believe that any Texas voters will approve of politicians framing up and gerrymandering a district in trying to beat somebody and to elect themselves. I advise you to check up on Oscar's doublecrossing the independent oil producers.

HOME PEOPLE KNOW BEST

If Raymond Brooks had asked the newspaper men in Abilene, instead of someone I had defeated for office, about my standing, he would have obtained more reliable information. The following is an editorial from the Abilene Daily Reporter-News, carried in its issue of January 22, 1934:

NOBODY WILL BEAT BLANTON

Another open season is rolling around for those who would like to retire TOM BLANTON to private law practice, either in person or by proxy, with indications of a rather large field against the Seventeenth District Congressman.

Vain hope. There never was a less propitious time for inaugurating a really formidable "beat BLANTON" campaign, and the more candidates there are the lesser chance any will have. Even this early in the game it looks safe to count him in again.

BLANTON'S forthright personality and his sometime headlong way of doing things have made him vulnerable politically in the respect that important enmities have been needlessly created. That has given him a lot of grief and cost him a lot of money in defending himself against attacks, most of them springing from personal motive. He has won in the past, and will win in the future, on a record of public service that is impregnable. Opponents who start out with promise of heavy artillery invariably end the campaign in a feeble and futile popping of firecrackers.

There was a time when BLANTON was virtually a lone wolf in the halls of the House of Representatives, defiantly baring his teeth at the pack. Jealous of their own petty prerogatives, stirred to childish anger by his ruthless baring of a system to which they subscribed, a great many otherwise fine Congressmen stooped to a conspiracy to make him impotent.

They failed. That time has passed. The west Texan is ace high in the national council, fitting like a glove in the recovery program. He is happy, busy, and so usefully engaged in the people's business that they will, when the time comes, send him back with plenty of votes to spare. Nobody will beat BLANTON this year.

OFFICE BELONGS TO THE PEOPLE

The office I hold is not mine. It belongs to the people whom I have the honor to represent. Whenever they want me to relinquish it I will do it without a murmur. Whenever my constituents believe that another can and will give them better service here than I am giving, I want them to retire me. It is their confidence and esteem only that remunerates me for all the hard work I have done, and am still doing, in their behalf. I have gained nothing from the office financially. Above a bare frugal living for my family, I have spent each year since I have been in Washington my entire income in trying to make the United States a more decent place for a poor man to live, and in addition I have sold my home in Abilene, my small ranch and livestock at Albany, and two farms since entering public office, and spent it all in carrying on investigations of graft, waste, and extravagance that has existed in Government business. I have never spent $1 of any public money on any junket. I have traveled all over the United States during vacations checking up Government plants, but have always spent every dollar of the expense out of my own pocket. If I were to die today, I would not leave anything whatever received from the Government that has been left over from my salary after paying expenses. So the people realize that they have an investment in me. Since they have been paying me a salary I have learned all about their business, with intimate detailed knowledge of every office and bureau, both in the United States and abroad, and just what their necessities are and all about the many ways they have of trying to get more money allowed them for waste and extravagance, and I know just how to stop them from getting it. It would take any new man, no matter how able and industrious and well qualified he might be, at least 10 years of hard work and intensive study and investigation to gain the knowledge I now have about Government business. Is there any big business concern with a hundred stores scattered all over the world that would discharge its general manager who had been with it for years, and who knew every detail about all of its business, just to employ some new man who wanted the job when it would take years for the new man to learn anything about the business? That is the situation that appeals to my constituents. I am their general manager here in the House of Representatives. Since they have been paying me a salary I have learned all about their complicated business. I am prepared to earn their salary every day that I serve here. I do not have to spend years to learn how. The people in my district realize that during the years it would take a new man to learn how, they might be losing hundreds of millions of dollars and their business might go to the bowwows.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD ONLY BULWARK

The daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is the Congressman's only bulwark against misrepresentations. Realizing this, and that unless Members here had some way of getting the real facts about their service here before their constituents, any vicious interest they opposed, or any malicious newspaper they refused to obey, or any designing politician in their district seeking to supplant them, through base misrepresentations about them made in their districts, while Members were busily engaged in Washington, could ruin any Member here, this Congress many years ago provided by law that any Member of Congress, by paying the full cost of printing himself, could send excerpts from the RECORD, covering the proceedings of this House, to the people in his district. Congress felt that this was a protection to the people, as well as a protection to their Congressmen. That has been a wise law since 1873. In one day here, frequently I save enough to pay the entire cost of printing the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and the expense of sending through the mails all franked matter sent by all 435 Congressmen for a whole year.

OPPONENTS ACTIVE IN MY DISTRICT

Since early in January, while I have been busy here 16 hours per day, Mr. State Legislator Oscar F. Chastain, who brags that he specially framed and gerrymandered my district to defeat me and elect himself, and Mr. District Judge Carl O. Hamlin, whom I stopped from drawing retired pay of $150 per month, have been traveling all over my district misrepresenting me and my record, when they know that I am 2,000 miles away, busily attending to the people's business, and daily helping the President in his recovery program, and that I will not get to leave here, or to devote one minute to a campaign, until just a short time before the primary.

They are telling my constituents that I am unpopular in Congress. I challenge them to name one Member of this House or the Senate who is unfriendly to me. I differ here on the floor frequently with many Members about legislation, and we cross swords with one another and fight back and forth across the aisle, and every Member here will admit that I have helped to kill as many bills in this House as any other Member for the past 16 years, but all of my colleagues here now realize that I am earnest and sincere in every fight I make, and I feel gratified that I now enjoy the respect and friendly feeling of every Member of this House and every Senator at the other end of the Capitol. I believe that I have as many close, personal, dependable friends in this House and in the Senate as any other Member here. I am the recipient daily of kindness, helpful cooperation, and friendly assistance from different Members, and their friendship is worth more to me than anything else in the world. Of course Oscar F. Chastain and Carl O. Hamlin do not want me to send excerpts from the RECORD about my work here to my constituents. It interferes with their misrepresentations. It dispels the cobwebs which malicious articles such as the one that dirty, cowardly, little cur, Raymond Brooks, sent out to newspapers in their behalf on March 21 from Cisco and my home city of Abilene. These excerpts showing my speech against unwarranted strikes, interferes with the misrepresentation made by the United Press and the Sweetwater Reporter when they said I "denounced labor" without quoting a single word I had said.

COULD NOT EVEN ANNOUNCE DECENTLY

When announcing, Carl O. Hamlin could not even do it decently. When he printed his announcement in the Breckenridge American on January 11, 1934, he tried to hit me under the belt by stating that up to this time the three new counties of Fisher, Erath, and Hamilton have been "ably represented in Congress" by the three Members—from whose districts Oscar F. Chastain brags that he took these three counties in order to defeat me and elect himself—and that he would give these new counties that same able representation they now have, purposely and designedly insinuating thereby that if these counties elected me they would not have that high class of representation.

BECAME ASHAMED OF THE LILA KEITH STATEMENT

Because I made public the statement he had filed here in 1928, when he had compensation granted him, purporting to have been signed by one named "Lila Keith", in which she certified that following his discharge Carl O. Hamlin was nervous, that his lungs gave him trouble, and that he had boils on his head, he has just printed a vicious attack against me in both the Breckenridge American and the Stephens County Sun, asserting that there is no such statement signed Lila Keith in his file, and that he has never been nervous, and has never suffered with his lungs, and has never had boils on his head. If there is now no such statement by Lila Keith in his file, he has caused someone to remove it. It was in his file just before he had the Veterans' Administration here to send his folder containing his file to the branch office at Dallas for his personal inspection. I will prove that it was in his file. Carl Hamlin cannot deny that he had friends here among the retired officers in the employ of the Veterans' Bureau, who themselves had been dropped, and who had access to his file. Carl Hamlin cannot deny that he had friends here, not employed by the Bureau, who have been helping him with his appeal, who have had access to his file. Carl Hamlin cannot deny that there was a statement by Lila Keith once in his folder. Carl Hamlin cannot deny that someone took a statement by Lila Keith out of his file. Carl Hamlin cannot deny that the official records of the Bureau still show now that there was once in his file a statement by Lila Keith, and he cannot deny that he knew this on April 5, 1934, at the time he printed a denial of it in the Breckenridge American. And Carl Hamlin cannot deny that when he printed that false denial in the Breckenridge Daily American on Thursday, April 5, 1934, and when he printed it in the Stephens County Sun on the same date, he then knew that he was deliberately trying to deceive the good people of Breckenridge, and of Stephens County, and of my district, in trying to make them believe that he knew nothing about a statement made by Lila Keith, and that there had never been a statement by Lila Keith in his file, and that I had concocted a false statement about Lila Keith manufactured out of the whole cloth with no basis or foundation whatever for it, when, if he had wanted to be honest and truthful, and had not wanted to deceive them, he would have told the people that there was a statement by Lila Keith once in his file, regardless of the claims he might now be making concerning it. Common decency and common honesty demanded that he should have made that revelation to the people in the statement he published in said two newspapers on April 5, 1934.

FIGHT AGAINST RETIRED PAY RACKETEERS BEGAN IN 1931 LONG BEFORE CARL HAMLIN ANNOUNCED FOR CONGRESS

District Judge Carl O. Hamlin would now have the people believe that I am waging my fight against allowing 4,800 officers who are not disabled through service to draw big retired pay of from $125 to $500 per month from the Government for life, because he is a candidate for Congress. He knows that is untrue. These 4,800 officers had gotten themselves on the rolls through misrepresentation and fraud. Congress had passed no law authorizing them to draw pay. The law passed by Congress authorized only the officers who had been disabled, and whose disability resulted from their service during the World War to draw pay. It did not take in the pretenders. It did not take in those who had simply presumed themselves to have been injured in service. These 4,800 officers had gotten themselves on the roll, and had pay allowed themselves, through misrepresentation, fraud, and collusion. The boards that did the retiring were composed of lawyers and doctors who had retired themselves, and who had granted themselves retired pay. They simply scratched each other's backs, and after retiring themselves on big monthly pay for life, additional to their big government salaries, they then began to retire their friends holding big State jobs all over the country.

MY HOUSE DOCUMENT NO. 802

After going to quite a lot of expense out of my own pocket checking up thousands of such cases, and after spending several months of hard work in vacation on investigations, the House of Representatives by unanimous consent on March 3, 1931, granted me permission to have printed as a House document my complete authentic list of all emergency officers with retired pay, giving their name, rank, address, class number, length of service, amount of retirement pay, accrued amount, and amount of their first check, and the position, if any, they held with the Veterans' Administration, and the annual salary they were drawing from the Government, if any, additional to their monthly retired pay. This became House document no. 802 and embraced 157 printed pages. It showed on page 139 that this district judge, Carl O. Hamlin (who was then drawing a State salary of $5,000 per year from Texas), whose address was given as "Box 41, 1303 W. Walker Street, Breckenridge", had gotten one of these "scratch-each-other's-back" boards to grant him retired pay of $150 per month for life, which $150 he was drawing each month from the Government additional to the $5,000 salary he was drawing from the State of Texas as district judge. He was not a candidate for Congress then on March 3, 1931. Yet I was fighting then to take him off the pay roll of the Government, just as I was then fighting to take the other 4,800 brother officers of his off of the Government pay roll, because there was no law authorizing it.

And in this House Document No. 802 you will find on its front page this certificate:

Seventy-first Congress, third session

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 3, 1931.

On motion of Mr. BLANTON, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That there be printed as a House document a list of the emergency retired officers, together with their pay and position.

Attest:

WM. TYLER PAGE, Clerk.

MY HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 355

Then after going to a lot of additional expense out of my own pocket getting the data from all over the United States, and after putting in more than a year's hard work on it, done mostly in vacations, I introduced in the House of Representatives my House Joint Resolution No. 355 on April 6, 1932, which was immediately referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It contained 35 printed pages, and named several hundred lawyers and doctors employed in the Veterans' Bureau, who were drawing big salaries ranging up to $9,000 per annum from the Government, and who at the same time, by claiming that they were disabled from service connection, and by "scratching each other's backs", each aiding the other, had granted to themselves retired pay of from $125 to $500 per month for life, additional to their regular Government salaries ranging up to $9,000 per annum, and I showed that it was a fraud upon the Government; and following the hearing and the evidence I produced before the Committee on Military Affairs, over 4,800 of these pretenders, who preferred to be called "the presumers", because they presumed that they had been disabled through service, were dropped from the rolls and kept off of the pay roll of the Government, and District Judge Carl O. Hamlin was one of them so dropped, and they have not yet been able to get back.

MY SPEECH OF MARCH 2, 1934

These 4,800 retired officers who have been dropped from the rolls and had their pay cut off have had one of the strongest, most active, most influential, and most powerful lobbies in Washington working for months to get a law passed through Congress granting them pay, despite the fact that they have no disability of service connection. They got the Senate to pass an amendment restoring their pay. The matter was up at issue between the House and the Senate. At the time I made my speech in the House on March 2, 1934, I was then fighting to keep the House from accepting the Senate amendment. I had this speech carefully prepared, with each and every statement made in it carefully checked to see that there was no error in it, and, with the exception of certain quoted evidence in it, delivered it in the House; but, so as to give me an opportunity to carefully recheck it before printing it, I printed only a small part of it on March 2, 1934, and secured permission of the House to have the balance of it printed later in the RECORD, and then I carefully checked up every fact stated in such speech, and saw to it that there was not an error in it when it was printed in the RECORD. And there is not an error in it. There is no erroneous statement in it about Carl O. Hamlin. And this speech helped to defeat the Senate amendment which would have put said 4,800 officers back on the roll and paid Carl O. Hamlin $150 per month for life. He cannot escape from the facts set forth by me simply by entering the lawyer's "general denial." If he wants to deny, he must deny specifically. I had my March 2, 1934, speech printed on March 12, 1934, and copies of it went to several citizens in Breckenridge on March 15, 1934, and were read by Carl O. Hamlin soon thereafter; a copy of the daily RECORD carrying such speech reached the office of the Breckenridge American as early as March 16, 1934, and yet Carl O. Hamlin did not make any denial of any part of it until April 5, 1934, when he on that date attempted to enter a general denial in the Breckenridge newspapers. He has never yet advised me that I made any statement about him that is erroneous. And there is no statement in my said speech of March 2, 1934, about him that is erroneous. Each and every statement in it about him is true and correct, and I can prove it by the records. I challenge him to show any statement in such speech about him that is incorrect.

CARL O. HAMLIN DELIBERATELY MISREPRESENTED HIS OWN RECORD

Keep in mind that in his statement he published in the Breckenridge American and the Stephens County Sun on April 5, 1934, and in the Hamlin Herald and Stamford Leader last Friday, and which he will doubtless publish in the other papers, and which by circular letters he is now mailing out to the voters of my district, while I am busy here 2,000 miles away, Carl O. Hamlin stated emphatically that he had never heard of a person by the name of Lila Keith, that his nerves were always steady, that his lungs were sound, and that he had never had a boil on his head during his entire life, and that I had deliberately falsified his record by stating in my speech anything about a statement by Lila Keith in his file, and that "Mr. BLANTON ought to furnish the Veterans' Bureau with a copy of this affidavit, for they are unable to find such in my file." Carl O. Hamlin knew when he published the above that he was deliberately misrepresenting me, was misrepresenting the facts, and was concealing from the public things about Lila Keith that he himself should have made clear. Read the following:

AFFIDAVIT

The District of Columbia:

Before me, the undersigned authority, on this day personally appeared Mrs. Louise Kennedy Marx, known to me to be a credible citizen residing at No. 4000 Cathedral Avenue, Northwest, in Washington, D.C., who, being by me duly sworn, upon her oath deposes and says: My name is Louise Kennedy Marx; I saw the folder containing the file of Carl Oswald Hamlin, No. C–1,433,354, containing all of his papers filed with the United States Veterans' Administration relating to his claim for compensation and retired pay, at the time an official of said Veterans' Administration exhibited it to Congressman THOMAS L. BLANTON in my presence to ascertain why the boards had held that Hamlin had no disability connected with his service, and I know positively that at that time there was in such folder a statement signed by Lila Keith on November 17, 1928, certifying that Carl O. Hamlin was nervous after his discharge, that his lungs gave him trouble, and that he had boils on his head; that in my presence Congressman BLANTON had the above allegations copied from said statement of Lila Keith, and also had copied other data from other papers said Carl O. Hamlin had filed with said Veterans' Administration; if said statement of Lila Keith is not now in the folder containing the file of Carl O. Hamlin, it has been removed therefrom within the last two months, because I know positively that it was in said Carl O. Hamlin's folder just before it was sent to Texas; the said statement of Lila Keith was right next to a statement made by Dr. Wilbur Smith relative to his removing the appendix of said Carl O. Hamlin in August 1919.

Mrs. LOUISE KENNEDY MARX.

Sworn to and subscribed by the said Mrs. Louise Kennedy Marx before me on this the 12th day of April A.D. 1934. Given under my hand and seal of office in the city of Washington, District of Columbia.

[SEAL] HARRY PILLEN,

Notary Public in and for the District of Columbia.

WHY DID CARL O. HAMLIN WANT HIS FILE IN TEXAS?

Long before I made my speech on March 2, 1934, Carl O. Hamlin had written and filed in the Bureau here the following letter:

NINETIETH DISTRICT COURT,
C. O. HAMLIN, JUDGE,
Breckenridge, Tex., January 29, 1934.

Replying to MCC-Bf
Re: Carl O. Hamlin C–I, 433,354.
Hon. GEORGE E. BROWN,
Director of Compensation,
Veterans' Administration, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: I hereby make the request to have my case file decentralized and sent to the regional office at Dallas, Tex., so that I may have the privilege of examining said file.

Respectfully,

CARL O. HAMLIN.

What did he want with his file? He said in his printed statement that he is not making any further effort to be restored to the pay roll. If he were not still trying to get another appeal of his case, why did he want his voluminous file sent to Dallas for his personal inspection?

But the Bureau here did not grant his request. Then he had one of his brother officers here intercede for him and insist on his file being sent to Dallas. Such officer here had access to his file at any time. So one folder containing part of his voluminous file was sent to Dallas on March 17, 1934. Shortly after it reached Dallas Carl O. Hamlin went there from Breckenridge and inspected it. He got the adjudication officer to write him a letter dated March 26, 1934, showing what said file contained and that there was no statement by Lila Keith in same. Of course, it was not then in that folder, because it had been taken out of it, and was probably taken out in Washington before it was sent to Texas. Then, finding out that they had overlooked in said folder a work sheet that specified that there was an affidavit by Lila Keith that had formed part of the evidence in Carl O. Hamlin's case, which specified that following his discharge he was nervous, that his lungs gave him trouble, and that he had boils on his head, he caused the following letters to be written:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
April 3, 1934.

Memorandum—MCC-Ba.
From: Director Veterans' Claims Service.
To: Chief Clerk's Division.
Subject: Hamlin, Carl O. C–1,433,354.
Attention: Decentralization Section.

This veteran's folder was decentralized to the Dallas (Tex.) regional office, March 17, 1934. However, his application for retirement and correspondence between him and the Director of Compensation are on file in the central office folder.

Capt. Watson B. Miller, chairman of the national rehabilitation committee, the American Legion, as representative of the veteran, has requested that this additional evidence be forwarded to the Dallas (Tex.) regional office for the convenience of the veteran in preparing his appeal for restoration of emergency officers' retirement benefits.

GEORGE E. BROWN.

Capt. Watson B. Miller is the same helper who got $187.50 per month for William Wolff (Poker Bill) Smith. Then the Bureau sent this letter to Dallas:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, April 3, 1934.

Refer to MCC-Ba.
Hamlin, Carl O. C–1,433,354.

MANAGER,
Dallas, Tex.:

This veteran's folder was decentralized to your office March 17, 1934. However, certain correspondence and the veteran's retirement application were not included in his folder. This additional evidence is now being transmitted for the convenience of the veteran in preparing his appeal for restoration of emergency officers' retirement benefits.

GEORGE E. BROWN,
Director Veterans' Claims Service.

So you see, that despite his statement to the contrary, Carl O. Hamlin is now preparing another appeal and is trying to get back on the disabled roll and is trying to get back his $150 per month, to which several boards have decided he is not entitled under the law, because he has no disability of service connection.

HAMLIN CORRECTS HIS EVIDENCE

Before the second folder mentioned above reached Dallas, Carl O. Hamlin had the Dallas officer give him a new letter dated March 30, 1934, which admitted that there had been a statement by Lila Keith filed in his folder, but that it was taken out, claiming that it didn't relate to him.

From a letter which Manager Read Johnson of the Dallas office wrote to Gen. Frank T. Hines, Administrator, I quote the following pertinent excerpts:

In reply to your radiogram of April 10, 1934, concerning the case folder of Carl O. Hamlin, C–1433354, there is attached hereto, in accordance with your instructions, two photostat copies of a work sheet which is contained in this folder and which is the only piece of paper contained in this entire file, having any reference whatever to an affidavit made by one Lila Keith in connection with this claim.

This claims file was received in this office on March 22, 1934, at 8:30 a.m. It was immediately dispatched to the adjudication officer, and it did not leave his desk until after an inspection of it had been made by the claimant. * * * While inspecting the file Judge Hamlin made definite inquiry with reference to an affidavit that might be contained therein which was supposed to have been made by one Lila Keith. * * * On March 26, 1934, at the request of the claimant, the adjudication officer wrote Judge Hamlin a letter detailing to him the evidence that was contained in his file. A copy of this letter is attached hereto. Some 2 or 3 days later Judge Hamlin came into the office personally to make an inspection of the file and it was again gone over by the adjudication officer, with Judge Hamlin, as referred to above. * * * At the time Judge Hamlin was in the office, he requested that a letter be forwarded to him over the signature of the manager, stating whether or not the piece of evidence in question was in the file. On March 30, 1934, I released a letter to him, advising him that upon another careful search of the file the adjudication officer had discovered a work sheet in the folder making reference to an affidavit made by one Lila Keith.

And this work sheet, made by some Bureau employee, mentioning the different documents filed in evidence by Carl O. Hamlin, in behalf of his claim, forming an index for the convenience of the different boards passing upon his case, is headed "Bureau examinations" and gives a brief outline of various affidavits embracing one by Dr. R. Van Duzen, one by Dr. Grover C. Wood, one by Dr. B. F. Rhodes, one by Dr. Wilbur Smith, and one by Lila Keith, dated November 17, 1928, received at Bureau November 19, 1928—which was the same identical date the affidavits of Doctors Rhodes and Smith were received showing they were all filed at the same time, and even this work sheet showed that in here affidavit Lila Keith stated that claimant has been very nervous ever since his discharge, and that his lungs have given him trouble, and that his head has given him trougle also, and that he has boils on his head continuously.

Carl O. Hamlin tried to convince these Bureau officials at Dallas that Lila Keith was referring to another, and because they could not find the original affidavit of Lila Keith in that folder had them write him the second letter dated March 30, 1934, certifying that "apparently" it had been taken out of the file for that reason. All of the above occurred before Capt. Watson B. Miller had the Bureau send the additional Hamlin folder to Dallas on April 3, 1934. How did Carl O. Hamlin and the Dallas officials know on April 30, 1934, when Hamlin had them write him the second letter, that his additional folder here in Washington did not contain the original Lila Keith affidavit, for it did not leave Washington until April 3, 1934? How does Carl O. Hamlin know that this original Lila Keith affidavit is not in some one of the numerous other files he has here in the Veterans' Bureau? For he has other files here which have not yet been sent to Texas.

CAPT. WATSON B. MILLER

District Judge Carl O. Hamlin selected the right man to help him get his $150 per month back when he selected Miller, who has received a salary of $7,500, and part of the time $10,000, for looking after disabled lawyers and judges. He helped Maj. William Wolff "Poker Bill" Smith get his $187.50 per month while Smith was drawing a salary from the Government of $9,000 per annum. I quote from my House Joint Resolution 355, page 12, the following portion of the testimony Capt. Watson B. Miller gave for Smith after he had been turned down by various boards, to wit:

Captain Miller testifying that since 1923 (when Smith became general counsel) he and Smith "have traveled extensively together from one end of the country to another, many times sleeping in the same room in hotels and on trains; scores of times during that period we have played golf together; frequently when playing golf together I have noticed that he held his hand in this position. I have also seen him walk a long distance over the holes with golf club in one hand and his other hand pressed on his lower left side; * * * Major Smith and I are about the same age and weight; on 25 or 30 occasions, when we have been doing similar things, he has had to quit before I did; on one occasion, when we were playing golf, he got as far as the seventh hole of a certain course we were on and quit, and didn't say why he quit, but he had some reason for doing it; it may have been associated with his service-connected disability."

And I quote from my said House Joint Resolution 355, page 10, the following from an affidavit of Annabel Hinderliter (whose evidence before the Military Affairs Committee in my hearing on my said resolution I quoted in my speech of March 2, 1934):

Annabel Hinderliter, stating that since May 7, 1921, Smith had been her immediate superior, that he had suffered with a cough and "since I have known Major Smith he has always carried more than the usual number of handkerchiefs," and on October 25, 1929, Smith—

The foregoing is the kind of evidence "pet" officers like "Poker Bill" Smith and Carl O. Hamlin, who were never within several thousand miles of a Germany enemy, filed in 1928, when they were trying to draw from the Government $187.50 and $150 per month, respectively, for life, to which under the law they were not entitled. When we faced Poker Bill with his record, he threw up his hands and agreed to pay his money back to the Government. Why does not Carl O. Hamlin pay back to the Government the several thousand dollars he has wrongfully received? He is still fighting to get back on the pay roll at $150 per month for life.

CARL O. HAMLIN GETS CHEAPEST INSURANCE IN THE WORLD

In his long attempted explanation and excuses to Mr. R. M. Simmons, of Sweetwater, which Carl O. Hamlin has published in all the newspapers, he admits that his health is now good (because he knows that voters expect a candidate for Congress to be in good health) he said: "My loss will continue to be financial as well as physical, by reason of the greatly increased insurance premium which I am now compelled to pay.

From one of Carl O. Hamlin's voluminous folders still in the Bureau here in Washington I quote the following letter he wrote:

C. O. HAMLIN,
JUDGE NINETIETH JUDICIAL DISTRICT
OF TEXAS, STEPHENS COUNTY,
Breckenridge, June 29, 1928.

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU,
Washington, D.C.

GENTLEMEN: Enclosed herewith find my check in the amount of $23.60. The same being premium payment for the quarter beginning July 1, 1928, on policy no. K-606646, in the name of Carl O. Hamlin.

Please be kind enough to acknowledge receipt of this letter.

Yours truly,

C. O. HAMLIN.

COH/h
Encl. ck.

The above was a $10,000 policy of Government insurance, which unlike the unstable insurance most of us carry, was good as gold, because payable by the Government, and under its provisions if he became permanently disabled it would be paid to him in cash, without his dying to get it, and it was given him at the special low rate for 5 years which Congress provided for all veterans from April 1, 1927, to April 1, 1932, at the end of which 5 years he had the right to convert it into permanent insurance. Where is there any citizen in my district not a veteran, who for these 5 years had a gilt-edge gold policy for $10,000 furnished them by the Government for a premium of only $23.60 per quarter? And at the end of said 5 years, when he converted his insurance into a permanent policy with its rate never changed again, he was granted this $10,000 policy for only $64.60 per quarter. No civilians in my district get that cheap a rate for a policy that is good as gold. The above is shown by the following letter Hamlin filed here:

C. O. HAMLIN, JUDGE, NINETIETH JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF TEXAS, STEPHENS COUNTY,
Breckenridge, March 1, 1932.

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU,
Insurance Department, Dallas, Tex.

GENTLEMEN: I am herewith enclosing 5-year convertible term policy no. K-606646, in the amount of $10,000, in the name of Carl Oswald Hamlin, together with application for change to ordinary life policy in the same amount of $10,000.

You will note in the application herewith enclosed, I have designated the effective date of said change as of April 1. According to my understanding, my present 5-year convertible term policy expires on April 1, and I desire to convert the same into an ordinary life policy, without any lapse in my insurance. The point is, I now desire to exchange my 5-year term policy for an ordinary life policy for the same amount as my term policy, and I most assuredly do not want any lapse in my insurance. So, if for any reason, the effective date which I have designated for the change would cause a lapse in my insurance, I wish you would please notify me at once so that I may change the said date; or this letter will be your authority to so change the said application.

I have designated in the application for change of policy the mode of premium payment as quarterly, and am herewith enclosing my check in the amount of $64.60, the same being quarterly premium payment which will be due upon the ordinary life policy.

If I have overlooked any matter or failed to do anything herewith that will endanger or cause the lapsing of my insurance, I will appreciate your notifying me at once, for, as stated before, I do not want my insurance to lapse, but want to take advantage of the privilege within the time limit to exchange my present 5-year convertible term policy to an ordinary life policy.

Thanking you for giving this matter your prompt attention, I am,

Yours very truly,

CARL OSWALD HAMLIN.

Until he became a candidate for Congress he signed his name Carl O. Hamlin and Carl Oswald Hamlin, but now in all campaign literature he is broadcasting throughout my district he signs "Carl Hamlin." He must be thinking about what Lila Keith said, that he was nervous after his discharge, and had boils on his head. What made him nervous? He was never out of the United States.

He thus carries a gilt-edged Government policy of $10,000 which will be paid to him in cash if he ever becomes disabled, and will be paid to his family when he dies, for which he pays only $64.60 per quarter. Is not that cheap insurance? And the premium will not ever be raised on him.

CARL O. HAMLIN ALSO RECEIVED A BONUS OF $1,186

C. O. Hamlin, Judge
Ninetieth Judicial District of Texas, Stephens County
BRECKENRIDGE, March 28, 1929.

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU,
Insurance Division, Washington, D.C.

GENTLEMEN: I hold policy no. K-606646 in the sum of $10,000, issued April 1, 1927, also adjusted-service certificate no. A-2099901 in the sum of $1,186.

I find no restrictions in these policies as to travel, etc., however, as travel by airplane is now becoming quite ordinary, just as a matter of precaution, I desire to know if you interpret your policy to place any restrictions on such mode of travel. I would appreciate you advising me in regard to this matter.

Yours truly,

C. O. HAMLIN.

DISTRICT GERRYMANDERED IN 1917

In 1917 I represented the Sixteenth (Old Jumbo) District of Texas, embracing 59 counties, running west to El Paso. Certain politicians in the Texas Legislature who wanted to go to Congress, gerrymandered the State, took 49 counties on the west away from me, and shunted me into an entirely new district running southeast to within 20 miles of Austin, embracing both Burnet and Llano Counties, placing me in what was then the new Seventeenth District. But their plans did not succeed. The people did not appreciate this "framing up" of districts. I won out over all candidates.

ANOTHER GERRYMANDER IN 1933

The following letter, dated September 3, 1933, sent me by a substantial citizen of Eastland, contains interesting information:

DEAR JUDGE: I enclose you yesterday's paper showing Oscar F. Chastain's announcement against you for Congress. In a talk I had with him he said he had gotten the legislature to strip you of 10 counties that had always given you big majorities, and had left you the counties embracing all of the politicians you had beaten for office. He told us that the representative from Abilene, in the State legislature, wanted to get your goat because you had kept his dad from going to Congress, and that he helped him frame you. He seems elated, and said that he had added the counties of Erath, Hamilton, and Fisher to your district, and that he had all three of them grabbed, as he was a native of Erath, and had influential relatives in Hamilton, and had a strong hold on Fisher. He thinks he is sure to carry Jones as he once taught school in Stamford.

I am telling you this just for information. You needn't worry. We will take care of you in Eastland County. Chastain's hair has grown white holding unimportant offices, and he has never made good at any of them. My private opinion is that he will run best in counties where he is least known.

ANOTHER LETTER FROM EASTLAND

I received the following letter from a friend at Eastland dated March 31, 1934:

DEAR JUDGE BLANTON: I want to give you the low down on Oscar Chastain. He has just employed a newspaper woman named Miss Maifred Hale, who is to run his campaign office and get publicity for him in newspapers. She came here from Fort Worth in 1931.

When Oscar Chastain made his race for the legislature his main plank was that he would abolish a lot of the surplus courts, and he mentioned when you was district judge for Eastland, and Breckenridge, and Albany, and Baird, and Abilene, and held the courts for these five counties, and now there was 1 judge for Breckenridge, 2 for Eastland, and 2 at Abilene. One of our judges here gave Oscar's daughter a position as stenographer, and Chastain forgot all about his campaign plank. He also promised that he would cut the cost of auto tags. But he failed. He assured the independent oil men that he would get them relief, and then laid down on them. After he got to Austin he said the people don't know what they want. And while C. W. Hoffman was in Austin he heard Chastain say that the people at Eastland don't know the difference between a barrel of oil and a barrel of molasses. As soon as you get home, let me know. We are not going to let you be lied on again like you were last time when Joe ran against you.

EDITORIAL FROM EASTLAND CHRONICLE

The following editorial is quoted from the Eastland Chronicle, which is the oldest newspaper in Eastland County, published at Eastland, where Oscar F. Chastain lives, in the issue of last Friday, April 13, 1934:

In a series of articles by Raymond Brooks, Austin newspaper correspondent, published recently in a number of papers in the Seventeenth Congressional District, the statement is made that Congressman THOMAS L. BLANTON is facing the supreme struggle of his political career, and that the result of the coming Democratic primaries may be to unhorse him for good.

Opponents of Mr. BLANTON, who are better informed as to the true state of affairs in the Seventeenth Congressional District than Mr. Brooks appears to be, get little comfort from these articles. They only wish these were the facts.

The facts are THOMAS L. BLANTON is stronger today in his district than he was 2 years ago when he defeated Joe H. Jones. It is also a fact that Jones was a stronger opponent than either of the candidates out after BLANTON'S political scalp this year.

Brooks points out that both of BLANTON'S opponents have records, one as a district judge and the other as a State legislator. That is true, but records oftentimes prove one's undoing, and that is just what many predict will happen to BLANTON'S opponents when the records they have made are compared with those of BLANTON.

The Eastland County candidate, Brooks states, is very popular in the county and the district. Brooks doesn't know his west Texans if he thinks any man is popular with them who stands up in the legislature of their State and makes the statement that "they don't know what they want", and that "they do not know the difference between a barrel of oil and a barrel of molasses." The Eastland County representative is charged with having made that statement in a speech in the State legislature. Whether he used such poor judgment or not this writer does not know, but he was credited by newspaper correspondents and others with having said it. We believe he denies it, however.

Col. Hugh Nugent Fitzgerald, veteran political observer on the Austin American, same newspaper on which Brooks is employed, doesn't share Brooks' opinion of BLANTON'S chances for reelection. In the July 22 issue of the Austin American Fitzgerald praised BLANTON for the record he has made in Congress and pointed out that many former critics of BLANTON had seen the light and were now thanking him for the splendid, unselfish service he has rendered the laborer, the farmer, war veterans, and others, and ventured the assertion that BLANTON would continue in Congress as long as he desired.

Brooks also showed his lack of knowledge of the existing facts when he stated that "after a long service in the House BLANTON got left out." BLANTON did not get left out, he could have easily been reelected, but dropped out of his own accord.

This is a time when voters are going to think twice before they act to turn out an "in" for an "out", especially when the "in" has been tried and found not wanting and the "out" is more or less an unknown quantity.

BROWNWOOD AND BROWN COUNTY STOLEN FROM ME

Brown is one of the 10 counties which Oscar F. Chastain has been bragging to people that he took away from me when he "framed" my district to elect himself. Brownwood is its county seat. The Brownwood Bulletin is its daily newspaper and is one of the best in west Texas. Its editor had distinguished service during the World War. He is Hon. James C. White. The following is his editorial published last week:

TOM BLANTON'S RECORD

Some of the most eulogistic appraisals of THOMAS L. BLANTON'S service in Congress are made by people outside Texas, reminding one of the Scriptural declaration that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country, although in Mr. BLANTON'S case there is an abundance of honor for him in his own district. From The Chronicle, published at Clarendon, Va., we take the following excerpts of an editorial written by Crandal Mackey, formerly commonwealth attorney for his State:

"The recent statement of FREDERICK VINSON, of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, that Congressman THOMAS L. BLANTON, of Texas, would not be overpaid if his salary were raised to $50,000 per year, is no more than others in Congress have said about that remarkable man.

"BLANTON, during his long service in Congress, has blocked more bad legislation than any other Member. Nothing escapes his vision.

"He has put through more good legislation than any other Member.

"BLANTON is always in his seat when Congress opens and has never been known to miss a roll call. He is always the first to arrive at a committee meeting and always knows to the greatest detail every matter that comes up for consideration. He has been rightly called a locomotive in trousers for he never stops day or night until exhaustion tells him: 'Something accomplished, something done, has earned a night's repose.'

"There is no man in Congress more familiar with parliamentary laws, practice, and procedure, and BLANTON uses this knowledge often with surprising results. BLANTON knows more ways for obstructing and defeating bad legislation than any Member of the House. His achievements along that line would fill a big book. He is the terror of the Treasury raider.

"With BLANTON everything is open and above board. With him candor is the courage of the soul. To know him is to hold him in the highest esteem and respect. Few men in public life are as unselfishly working for the good of others. His example is exalting and inspiring to those who seek honesty and purity in public and private life. His influence in Congress has steadily grown until he is now one of the most powerful leaders."

Brown County people have cast their last ballots for Mr. BLANTON, unless he becomes a candidate for some other office than congressional Representative, but they have appreciated his faithful service and will continue to be interested in his political success. The recent redistricting measure took this and neighboring counties out of his district, but did not sever the ties of friendship or the bonds of gratitude that hold the people here to him.

Such expressions, Mr. Chairman, from men like Jim White, showing appreciation for earnest service, is the most valuable remuneration for our work here that we receive. Evidently Raymond Brooks did not go to Brownwood when he was making his hired prognostications.

COKE COUNTY STOLEN FROM ME IN 1917

In the 1917 gerrymander Coke County was 1 of the 49 counties taken away from me by the politician legislature. Bronte is its largest city. I quote the following from the Bronte Enterprise, in its issue of February 16, 1934:

BLANTON DAUNTLESS, UNIMPEACHABLE, ASSERTS UPSHAW, EX-CONGRESSMAN

A far away but vigorous tribute to Thomas L. BLANTON, Seventeenth District Congressman, is conveyed in the appended letter to Dr. T. S. Knox, Abilene, handed to the Reporter-News for publication. The writer, William D. Upshaw, is a former Member of Congress from Georgia. The letter, dated Washington, D.C., follows:

MY DEAR DR. KNOX: Having one time held an evangelistic meeting with my golden-hearted friend, Dr. M. A. Jenkins, pastor of the First Baptist Church in Abilene, plus several other public addresses there, plus also inspirational speeches to the schools and colleges there, I have come to think of Abilene as holding sort of inside track in my heart among all Texas communities.

Therefore I feel like congratulating you on being the pastor of Abilene's outstanding citizen and one of the Nation's greatest lawmakers, Congressman THOMAS L. BLANTON.

I learn from a Texas friend that BLANTON has vigorous opposition at the next election. I know nothing of the men who oppose him; but I do know THOMAS L. BLANTON as a stainless, fearless, resourceful statesman, who during our 8 years together in Congress not only voted on the right side of every moral question but who fought with vigilant fidelity for every form of constructive legislation. He has been known for years as the watch dog of the Treasury, saving hundreds of thousands, indeed millions, of dollars from unworthy appropriations.

But in spite of his truceless warfare against everything he conceives to be wrong, he has grown increasingly popular with best Members on both sides of the House, for they honor him as a leader of dauntless courage and unimpeachable character. The defeat of such a man would be a public calamity, and I hope the people of his district will continue to make their splendid contribution to the Nation by guaranteeing his triumphant reelection.

Editor's note: The Enterprise reproduces the above for two reasons: First, while Bronte is not in the Seventeenth Congressional District, Blackwell is. We have a goodly number of readers in Blackwell and the Blackwell community. Blackwell is in the Seventeenth District. Judge BLANTON has many friends in the Blackwell country, some of whom requested the above article be inserted in the columns of the Enterprise, which we are glad to do. Then, too, the Enterprise editor has known W. D. Upshaw for many years. Nearly 40 years ago he was a guest in our home—he was "Earnest Willie" then, "the cripple boy lecturer", who traveled about in his armed wheel chair—that was long before he dreamed of Congress, perhaps. His first book, Echoes from a Recluse, was an inspiration to us in our younger life and lingers with us still.

Incidentally, we were in his home city, Atlanta, Ga., the night he went away to Washington to take his seat in Congress. We went to the station that night, with the thousands of his other friends, to see him off for Washington. He wore a homespun suit of clothes, given him by admiring friends. So impressed were we with the simplicity and sincerity of this great man—(great not only as an intellectual genius, but great in gentility and nobility of character and loftiness of ideals, both in his private and public life)—that we drafted some verses and printed in our newspaper, which we were editing in a central Texas city at that time. We forwarded him a copy of the issue containing the verses, entitled, "The Congressman in the Homespun Clothes." One of the most appreciated letters we ever had from anyone as a friend came in response to the verses. So, did we not know Judge BLANTON, the above lines from W. D. Upshaw would be all the commendation for us to underwrite for him without limit. But we know Judge BLANTON—and it would take a mighty strong line-up, if we resided in his district, to keep us from following him to "the jumping-off place." And, generally, after his political enemies have finished pouring out their wrath upon him, they have to come back and say, "We find no fault in this man—except we can't control him, nor get him to do only as he conceives to be right and honorable and for the country's good."

LETTER FROM FORMER STEPHENS COUNTY JUROR

Written from Sweetwater on March 25, 1934, I received the following letter from a substantial citizen:

DEAR JUDGE BLANTON: I am now living in Sweetwater. You will remember that I used to serve on your juries at Breckenridge. I have often thought how different court is run there now. Judge Hamlin isn't busy a fourth of his time. He has been running all over your district campaigning.

During the past 2 days there has been a convention of county commissioners here. Judge Hamlin had two of his Stephens County commissioners here campaigning their entire time. I enclose you one of his cards they were giving out here. Hamlin states on these campaign cards that you were repudiated in the last election by certain counties in your new district. That was all these two commissioners could talk about.

They didn't tell the people about the dirty campaign Jones made, or the lies he told all over your district while you were busy in Washington, or about the full-page ads. carried right at the last in the Fort Worth papers, or that you didn't have time to campaign your district. And they didn't mention the big majority your home county gave you.

I know that Judge Hamlin made a secret campaign against you in the last campaign both in Stephens County and in Palo Pinto County and did everything he could to beat you. I didn't understand it then. But since I have learned about his being cut off from his clabber and you keeping him from getting his $150 per month from the Government, I now understand it.

LETTER FROM FISHER COUNTY

I received the following letter from a good citizen of Fisher County:

DEAR JUDGE BLANTON: I want you to know that your old friends here will stand by you. Both Chastain and Judge Hamlin are trying to get a line up here. Possibly it may interest you to know of the racket Hamlin has played in holding court for other judges away from his home county. He gets extra pay when he does it. Sometime ago he held court at Roby a few days for Judge Chapman, and if you will investigate it at Austin you will find that he collected $34.85 from the State of Texas for extra allowance.

BUSY HERE IN WASHINGTON

I am busy here in Washington, Mr. Chairman, attending to the people's important business. I have no time for campaigning. I am kept on the grind 16 hours per day. None of us know yet just how much longer we will be kept here. There was a dirty, lying campaign made against me in my district in 1932. Much outside money was sent into my district to defeat me. Men were employed to make house to house canvasses against me in most of my counties. Every kind of a lie imaginable was told. I had no time to properly campaign my district after I reached Texas. I could only make a speech here and there. It was a great wonder that I was not defeated. Most of the county papers have not yet received their pay for my opponent's advertising.

Several like the Abilene Reporter-News and the Brownwood Bulletin had to bring suit. I am not going to allow unscrupulous politicians to repeat this year what was done in 1932. I am going to let the people know the facts. I am going to have printed at my own expense in a few days and send to my constituents a copy of the resolution passed by my last district Democratic convention for my district. Some of the leading citizens of my district were members of the resolutions committee and signed it. Until I can get to Texas I must rely upon my friends to look after my interests. If I had not made fights for the people here I would not have opposition.

Mr. Chairman, after most of our hard work had been accomplished I took a few days' rest about the last of April 1933. On the few votes that occurred during my short absence I was paired with a Republican, so that my position was counted on every vote. The following shows that I was under obligations to our able Speaker, Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY, for these few days of rest:

THE SPEAKER'S ROOMS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D.C., April 15, 1933.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR TOM: Congress has been running at a very high rate of speed. I am warned by the House physician that a number of Members are overtaxing themselves.

I have been watching you and your work. You are overworking. You are rendering a splendid service. I know of no one who works harder than you. For the next few weeks there will not be so many important measures coming up, so I suggest that toward the end of the month you take a rest. I sincerely hope that you will accept this suggestion in the spirit in which it is intended.

Very truly yours,

HENRY T. RAINEY.

And including the above, the following letters, Mr. Speaker, are among my most valuable possessions:

OFFICE OF THE MAJORITY LEADER,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D.C., June 5, 1933.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR TOM: As we approach the close of the session, I do not wish to fail to express my deep appreciation for your kindness and valuable support.

In this connection, may I say that during all my long service I have never served with a Member who was more diligent in his effort to render real service to the people, not only of his district but of the entire Nation, and who watched appropriations and expenditures more closely than yourself. It will never be known just how much money you have saved to the people by your watchful care, your ability, as well as your close knowledge of parliamentary procedure and governmental affairs. It has enabled you to render a real and a great service.

With best wishes, I am, sincerely yours,

JO BYRNS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
Washington, D.C., June 17, 1933.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House Office Building.

DEAR TOM: I am familiar with the splendid record you have made in Congress and as a member of the Appropriations Committee for economy, and I wish to join with our Democratic majority leader, Hon. Jo BYRNS; Democratic Chairman CANNON, of the subcommittee; and Hon. JOHN BOYLAN, of New York, in their commendation of your services.

You will recall that just before the Republican Administration expired, on March 3, 1933, the District appropriation bill was pending in conference and you refused to sign the conference report because you thought the amount carried in the bill constituted too great a burden upon the taxpayers of the Nation. The night before Congress adjourned you led the fight against this bill and succeeded in defeating the approval of the conference report. Your act in that fight has been vindicated by the President, and by the Democratic Congress, who reduced the Budget and this appropriation bill in accord with your contentions, thus saving over $6,000,000 in this bill alone.

I am not unmindful of the fact that you and I have never agreed upon prohibition, that you are a pro and I am an anti, but this question should be relegated to second place when it comes in conflict with the crying need of reduction and retrenchment of the enormous expenditures of our Federal Government.

I commend you for your many accomplishments and your great energy in the interest of economy.

Your friend,

JAMES P. BUCHANAN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
COMMITTEE ON WORLD WAR VETERANS' LEGISLATION,
Washington, D.C., June 23, 1933.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House Office Building.

DEAR TOM: When you go home, I want you to tell those ex-service men for me that they will make a serious mistake if they turn against you after all you have done for them, and especially will do themselves an injury if they help to deprive themselves of the benefit of your services in the future.

Assuring you of my very kindest regards and best wishes at all times, I remain,

Sincerely your friend.

J. E. RANKIN,
Chairman of Committee.

From Postmaster General James A. Farley:

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE,
Washington, D.C., June 16, 1933.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House Office Building.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I want you to know that I greatly appreciate the support you gave the administration program during the session just closed. I feel certain the people of the country generally realize that more beneficial legislation was passed at this session of Congress than ever before in the Nation's history.

For the part you played in these remarkable accomplishments I want you to know that I am personally grateful.

With best wishes, I am, sincerely,

JAMES A. FARLEY, Chairman.

UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., May 27, 1933.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: I realize you hardly know me, as my first service in Congress began last December, when I succeeded Judge Crisp as Representative from the Third District of Georgia.

I have carefully considered and critically analyzed all proposed legislation and listened attentively to practically every argument and colloquy occurring in the House since my entry into Congress, and it is my candid opinion that your untiring efforts in behalf of economy during this period of our greatest distress deserves grateful recognition by the Nation and the plaudits of our people.

May you live long to continue the splendid service which so few are disposed or capable of rendering.

Very truly yours,

B. T. CASTELLOW.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time, and yield 10 minutes to my friend from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE].

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, our distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], whose sincerity of purpose no man can question, and I a few moments ago had a lapse of memory as to how each of us voted on the discharge rule when it was adopted. I overlooked the fact that I was bound by caucus action, and of course voted for the rule against my better judgment. I stated to the gentleman that I had not done so, thinking I was correct. On examination of the RECORD I recall the circumstances under which the vote was cast. Now, in order that the gentleman's record may be cleared, I think it but fair to state that the RECORD on the next page to which he referred reveals that the gentleman himself also voted for that rule. We were both in error when we said we voted against it. Like myself he condemns it and is ready to amend it. I repeat, nothing this House has done can hinder it or hamper its proper functions more than this foolish discharge rule. I recognize that it was put in effect under the leadership of my own party, but I venture the assertion that a majority of the gentlemen sitting on the Democratic side, after having seen its operation here, are now ready and willing and anxious to amend the discharge rule. What I wanted was to find out, if I could, how many gentlemen on the Republican side, some of whom may say they did not vote for it but who did, and who, like us, have seen its effect, are now willing to join the majority on this side for the amendment of the rule. The vote adopting the rule was overwhelming—only seven votes against the resolution.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. DITTER. During the course of the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], the gentleman from Alabama directed an inquiry to him as to whether he might anticipate the support of the minority for the elimination of the rule. May I suggest to the gentleman that during the course of the sessions of the House thus far all of the gag rules that were required for the administration program have been supported by the majority side and carried in spite of the protestations of the minority. Is not that true? So that gentlemen on the Democratic side could carry this thing through, even though we Republicans refused to join with them.

Mr. McDUFFIE. On both sides of the aisle, when it comes to gag rules, probably you will find that honors are even, if the gentleman will look up the record. Sometimes it is necessary in a body as large as this to have gag rules. The party charged with responsibility should not be embarrassed in discharging that responsibility, and often is called upon to do things which it does not especially enjoy doing, such as operating under gag rules. The gentleman's side has done it, and my side has done it.

Much has been said here about the publication in certain newspapers of the names of those gentlemen who have signed petitions under this discharge rule. If it is against any rule of this House to publish names of those who sign a petition let us abandon that rule. I am not so sure but this House puts itself in an unfortunate attitude before the country if we protest against the public knowing of our actions on this floor. The petition is a public document, and men who sign the petition should not object to the public knowing that they signed it. If it be against any rule of this House for the public to know who signs the petitions, such a rule itself should be eliminated. Certainly Members of this House should not conceal or hide their signatures to a petition to discharge a committee.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not true that the rules do not prevent these names from being published? There is nothing in the rule itself to prevent the publicity of the names on this petition.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I agree with the gentleman, but aside from that I can see no reason why any gentleman should object to having the public know that he had put his name on one of these petitions.

Mr. DOWELL. Certainly not; and it ought to be a public document.

Mr. McDUFFIE. And it is. There are now more than 20 petitions on file awaiting signatures. So much for that. We have found on our side a majority, I believe, who feel that the rule is unworkable, that it does not make for orderly processes of legislation, and who will vote to amend it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. In a moment. We are ready to amend the rule, but a majority of the Democrats cannot do it without some aid from the Republicans, such as the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], who says that he is ready and willing now to vote to amend the rule.

On this side of the aisle I think it should be said that when we find we have made a mistake or committed an error, we wish to correct it. The trouble about the gentleman's side of the aisle is that it does not correct its mistakes. I am not speaking about mistakes the gentleman may have made, I am speaking of the gentleman's side of the aisle, the gentleman's party.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I will yield if the gentleman can get me more time.

Mr. DITTER. I shall be pleased to give the gentleman sufficient time to answer the question.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman spoke about us not recalling how we voted on this rule; it is difficult sometimes to remember back 2 or 3 years, but may I say to the gentleman that even today to the lay mind, to the mind of the man not legally trained, all the rules of the House are not easily understood. A great many of the Members are lawyers, but a great many others are not.

After we Republicans voted against the previous question, then we put the matter of permitting 145 signers to discharge a committee up to the Democratic Party who wanted the rule. Notwithstanding the fact that the Democratic administration, when I first came in here, did everything under the heavens to harass the Hoover administration, we wanted to give them the opportunity to do that which they thought would be the best thing to do when they came into power. We did not want to hamstring President Roosevelt as the Democrats hamstrung former President Hoover, because it was not the proper thing to do; it was unjust; and we Republicans would not do that to our President today. We believe in helping our President when he is right but will oppose him only when he is wrong.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman from Alabama subscribe to all that?

Mr. McDUFFIE. No; but I think it is well to let the gentleman from Pennsylvania finish his statement, for he says a layman has difficulty at times in understanding the rules and what he should do, and I want to help him. I have not the time now to discuss the measure of cooperation Mr. Hoover received. The record speaks for itself.

Mr. RICH. I want to help the gentleman's side of the House so the gentleman's party can enact legislation that is going to be for the benefit of America and not be a matter of politics.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman's purposes are very high, and, of course, I am willing to join the gentleman in all sincerity in carrying out his very high motives. Unfortunately, this is a political body; and if the gentleman has come here from Pennsylvania thinking that he has come to a body that is not political, indeed he does need to learn a great deal. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Is it the gentleman's purpose to change the rule so that a majority would be required to discharge a committee?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes; but I understand our leadership believes this rule is a bad one. I am not speaking for the leadership on our side. My idea, of course, is that when a majority of the House expresses itself in favor of considering any measure, then that measure should be considered, and not otherwise.

May I repeat what I said the other day: We are drifting toward government by petition; government by blocs and minorities; and I think all fair-minded Members on both sides of the aisle will agree that this does not make for the welfare of this great Government of ours. Whenever a majority of the Members of the House, be they Republicans or Democrats, say that any bill should be considered, then it is the expression of the will, I take it, of the majority sentiment of the American people. But when only 145 Members of 435, by petition, can work their will and take up the time of the House to consider what they think proper and what is demanded by organized interests back home, regardless of the will of the majority, that, I say, is not the proper way to legislate. Again I appeal for the modification of this rule.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is it not a fact that the present rule provides that 145 Members may force a vote on the question of discharging a committee?

Mr. McDUFFIE. That is right.

Mr. DITTER. But even under the present rule the committee is not discharged unless the majority want to discharge it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes; the first vote for or against discharging a committee generally reflects the views of the majority of the House on the measure asked for by petition of the House. It, of course, makes a record.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is true only if a majority wants to consider the bill. There is no possible chance of the bill's being given consideration even under the present discharge rule, for it merely makes possible consideration of the question of discharging a committee when 145 Members sign the petition.

Mr. McDUFFIE. A bloc of only 145 Members should not have the power to force a vote on any measure, but aside from that, the gentleman knows that the committees of this House fairly represent the sentiment of this country.

Mr. BOILEAU. That was not the case with the bonus petition, for instance.

Mr. McDUFFIE. And the gentleman knows that for all practical purposes if measures come here approved by a majority of the Members in this House or if a majority deems them wise measures, they will receive the attention of the committees. Some of the best work done by the committees of Congress, in my judgment, is stifling bills that are unwise, that are not for the general good of all the people, and that should not be passed.

Mr. BOILEAU. That was not the case with the bonus petition. The majority of the House wanted the bonus bill but could not get it out of the committee.

Mr. McDUFFIE. That may be true.

Mr. BOILEAU. And if we had not had the 145 discharge rule, the gentleman knows we would never have gotten that bill out for consideration. Without this discharge rule legislation would be suppressed. That is the trouble.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman has no fear of any vote he might cast here?

Mr. BOILEAU. No; I have not one.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Not one! I congratulate the gentleman, for his is a rare experience. The gentleman knows that question after question may or can be presented here under this discharge rule, which serves only to embarrass those on the gentleman's side as well as those on this side.

Mr. BOILEAU. A Member of the House should be willing to stand by his convictions.

Mr. McDUFFIE. A majority of the Members may not be interested in questions presented by petition of 145 and may not wish favorable action upon them. Important business of the House may be hindered and unwise legislation may be passed. Legislation by petition is wrong, regardless of embarrassment.

Mr. BOILEAU. The mere matter of embarrassment is not justification for refusing to vote.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am one of those who voted against the rule.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman had better look at the RECORD. If the gentleman did, he is one of seven, if I remember correctly.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am one of seven, I think. I am sorry that the action taken by the Democrats at that time has risen to haunt them, but I am glad to support an amendment to that rule.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. May I say that it is understood that the conference report on the Bankhead cotton control bill will come up immediately after the gentleman concludes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, under our existing form of government it rests with the Congress to legislate for the District of Columbia. It is a responsibility which I do not feel is welcomed by the national lawmakers but, at the same time, one we cannot shirk. In times such as we are now experiencing, there is little time for the Representative or Senator to look after the many problems confronting the District. Monday a week ago was District Day; that is the regular day set aside for the consideration of legislation affecting the District of Columbia. Nearly a score of bills were on the calendar. Outside the 21 Members on the District Committee I doubt if there were a half dozen of the remaining 414 Members in the House who had ever read one of the bills. I confess I had never before Monday even looked at one of the measures, not because I am not interested in the welfare of the District and its citizens, but because my time has been taken up with other matters directly affecting the people of my State.

The members of the House District Committee are all hard-working, conscientious legislators; they give their time to questions pertaining to District affairs, knowing this labor will be of no benefit to them in their district back home. Called upon to perform a duty they respond and I desire to emphasize, nothing I say today is to be construed in the least as a reflection upon Mrs. MARY NORTON, the chairwoman, and members of her committee.

Investigate the personnel of the District Committee and you will find some of the members are assigned to as many as four House committees. Who can expect under such conditions members of the committee can give the time to District affairs they would like.

Under the rules of the House, the second and fourth Mondays are set aside as District days, but at the close of a session you will find the leaders have permitted the committee to have recognition not more than 5 or 6 days. The result is that when the committee does get its day Mrs. NORTON is required to call up the bills that are least controversial.

I have referred to this condition solely as justification for my consuming time today on a subject of great importance, not only to the District but also residents of nearby Maryland and Virginia.

As a result of over 20 years' residence in Washington, I have a large number of friends who reside here. I am pleased to be able to call the Commissioners, Mr. Hazen, Mr. Allen, and Major Gotwals, close personal friends. I became intimately acquainted with Major Gotwals when he served as district engineer of the Army Engineer Corps and was stationed in my home city, St. Louis.

It has been my custom to call on Major Gotwals New Year's Day. When I visited his home last New Year's, I found him standing at a table covered with maps and papers hard at work. After greeting me Major Gotwals said:

I am trying to solve a problem, one most interesting to me from an engineer's standpoint but far more important to official Washington, as well as to the people of this city and adjoining States, because it has a direct bearing upon their health.

I became interested immediately, and we talked at length upon the disposal of sewage in the Potomac River.

Having spent considerable time on the river and being an ardent fisherman, I had long known that the sewage in the river had practically eliminated fish from nearby waters, and the fish caught were not fit for consumption. I was also aware the river abutting the District and below for many miles was condemned by the natives as being unfit for bathing purposes; but this was the first time I had been advised that the health of the citizens of the District, as well as of the hundreds of thousands who visit the Capital annually, was in jeopardy.

The District of Columbia has had many competent Engineer Commissioners but none more competent nor any who have endeared themselves more to the people of Washington than Maj. John C. Gotwals. Knowing him as I do, I was impressed with his sincerity, and I will ever remember when he said to me:

Congressman, the day is sure to come that Congress as well as the people of the District will regret it if something is not done within a short time in reference to the sewerage, and sewage disposal, of the District of Columbia and adjoining territory.

Aware that Major Gotwals' term as Engineer Commissioner would expire this summer, that if Congress or some other Government agency did provide for the project he would probably have nothing to do with its construction, I asked him why he was so intensely interested. He replied that he fully understood the conditions, felt in time it would strike at the health of the community, and considered it his duty to let those in authority know of the conditions.

I have made some investigation, and being convinced a menace to the health of everyone residing here, from the President down, does exist, I am calling it to the attention of the Congress.

In my quest for information I found a report of an investigation made by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service of conditions resulting from the present method of the disposing of sewage in the Potomac River. It was in response to a Senate resolution, Senate Document 172, Seventy-second Congress, second session. The report contains 65 pages, but I will quote only the "Summary and Conclusions", which follow:

SUMMARY AND CONCLUSIONS

In compliance with Senate Resolution No. 44 of March 11, 1932, requesting that the United States Public Health Service make an investigation of conditions resulting from the present method of disposing of sewage from the District of Columbia into the Potomac River, a study was conducted during the summer of 1932 which included the collection of many water samples for chemical and bacteriological examination from the watercourses in and about Washington; the tabulation of data relative to stream flow in the Potomac River, above Washington; studies of rainfall statistics and elevations and times of high and low tide in the river; and a survey of the sources of pollution on the watershed.

The survey was conducted when the discharge from the watershed was below the general average but representative of what may be expected during a considerable period of time in the future. The results obtained during the past summer are therefore indicative of probable conditions in the river for a considerable portion of the time during the summer season.

In response to the specific questions propounded in the Senate resolution the investigation has indicated that—

1. During the summer months of decreased stream flow and high-water temperatures the concentration of sewage bacteria in the entire river system from Little Falls Creek on the upper Potomac River and for the entire length of the Anacostia River within the District of Columbia, downstream to about Fort Foote, is such that the water is unsafe for bathing and constitutes a menace to public health from the standpoint of contracting sewage-borne diseases if bathing in the river is to be permitted.

2. Between Fort Foote and Hallowing Point there is a questionable area, the extent of pollution and its effect on bathing beaches depending upon the volume of discharge, which governs times of flow, which in turn affects rates of natural purification.

3. Below Hallowing Point sewage from the Washington area has no sanitary significance during the summer months when the river is used for bathing and other recreational purposes.

4. In the section of the Potomac River from a point between the sewer outlet and Fort Foote (the exact location depending upon the volume of flow in the river) to the vicinity of the railroad bridge above Hains Point, and in the Anacostia River to the District of Columbia-Maryland line, there exists a zone in which the dissolved oxygen is reduced to such an extent that critical conditions are reached in the summer months when the run-off from the upper watershed decreases to between 1,000 and 3,000 second-feet. With normal increases in population and an additional sewage load in the river, critical oxygen conditions will occur more frequently and be of longer duration. With complete exhaustion of the dissolved oxygen, anaerobic conditions will prevail at times, becoming more frequent with increased sewage pollution, and the gaseous decomposition products will cause odors and annoyances to residents and to persons using the park facilities along the river.

5. The oxygen content of the water for a considerable distance below the sewer outlets during the summer period was below that required for supporting fish life, and in a considerably larger area it is rapidly approaching similar conditions.

6. Below Fort Foote there appears to be sufficient dissolved oxygen at all times to support all the various forms of fish life.

7. The first oyster areas below Washington are located in the Wicomico River, nearly 70 miles below the sewer outlets, and are not affected by the Washington sewage, except possibly during periods of exceptional floods; and even under flood conditions it is believed that the pollution reaching this section of the Potomac River would in no way affect the oysters for human consumption.

In view of the conditions now existing in the Potomac River in the Washington metropolitan area, and in view of the fact that the study of proper methods of sewage disposal and the design and construction of sewerage works require a number of years, it appears essential, if it should be considered desirable to prevent the development of nuisances and make the river suitable for bathing and other recreational purposes and capable of supporting fish life during the summer, that the District of Columbia take steps toward providing the treatment of its sewage to relieve the constantly increasing sewage load reaching the river. The question as to whether the expense involved in the provision of sewage treatment required to meet these ends would be justifiable is a matter to be determined by the authorities who must assume responsibility for the expenditure of public funds. In view of the fact that no public water supply is now or is likely in the near future to be affected by pollution of the river in the vicinity of Washington, there appears to be at present no important public-health problem involved other than the use of local waters for bathing.

If it should not be considered justifiable to incur the expense necessary to reclaim the river for bathing purposes, this problem could be solved, of course, by prohibiting bathing in local waters.

In weighing the question as to whether the expense for sewage treatment is warranted at this time, the recreational value of the river, possible damage from pollution to private property adjoining the stream, and the probability that treatment ultimately will have to be provided—all should be taken into consideration.

Suitable methods of artificial sewage treatment are available for the purification of the sewage from the District of Columbia, should such purification be considered justifiable at this time. Should sewage treatment be deemed advisable, preliminary works should first be installed and placed in operation as soon as practicable. The estimated cost of complete treatment works is between $8,000,000 and $9,125,000.

In view of the magnitude of the works necessary, the design and construction of which require highly specialized training and experience, it would appear desirable to have available the services of one or more engineers, specialists in this subject, acting singly or as a board, to cooperate with the District sewer department engineers in the design and construction of the purification works.

I am told that if those responsible for that investigation and report are called before a congressional committee or a Government agency considering this project, some statements bearing on the future health of the people of this community will be made that will be far stronger than those found in the report. When I asked why these views were not included in the report, I was advised the investigators did not want to alarm the people of the city.

As a result of the recommendation made in the report I just referred to and under a grant of $40,000 by Public Works authorities, a board of sanitary engineers was appointed to determine the need for a treatment plant and to fix the type and capacity of such a structure. This board found the Potomac River so polluted with sewage as to be unattractive and at times of low flow in the warmer months offensive in appearance, low in dissolved oxygen, highly contaminated with sewage bacteria, and as a result of these conditions unsatisfactory for recreation and some other purposes for a distance of more than 20 miles downstream from the Anacostia River.

To remedy these conditions the board recommended that sewage from the city be purified to a high degree by the activated sludge process during the 6 warmer months of low river discharge and during the 6 cooler months to a lesser degree by plain sedimentation, and that the sludge obtained from this plant be processed and used to provide fertilizer and humus for the farm lands of the penal institutions at Lorton, Va. It was proposed to construct this plant on District-owned property at Blue Plains, D.C., at an estimated cost of $8,000,000, and to operate it at an annual estimated cost of $400,000 from District revenues under congressional appropriations.

A bill was presented by the Commissioners to the Bureau of the Budget for submission to Congress authorizing the construction outlined above, but was disapproved as not being in accord with the financial program of the President. However, just prior to this disapproval and in response to a request from the Public Works Administration, the Commissioners submitted as second in priority of four projects an item of $8,000,000 for this treatment plant. No official reply has been received, but the newspapers under date of April 4 carried a story to the effect that all four projects had been disapproved pending availability of additional funds for such grants.

You see, so impressed were Secretary Ickes and his associates of the Public Works Administration, that this project warranted consideration, that it advanced $40,000 to employ outstanding engineers to make an investigation.

The report will appear in three parts. Part I, consisting of 140 pages, contains a summary and recommendations which I will quote. It is as follows:

SUMMARY AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Summary of findings: The findings may be stated as follows:

1. The present method of sewage disposal by dilution is unsatisfactory because the Potomac River is badly polluted by the sewage discharged into it.

2. The population of the District of Columbia and certain small contiguous areas from which sewage probably will be discharged into District sewers is estimated at 650,000 and 850,000 as of 1950 and 1970, respectively.

3. The average volume of sewage to be treated is estimated at 200 gallons per capita per day, equivalent to 130,000,000 and 170,000,000 gallons per day as of 1950 and 1970, respectively.

4. The sewage as compared with that of other large cities is weak, because of the large per capita volume, but the per capita quantity of polluting matter is rather large.

5. Ordinarily the discharge of the Potomac River is low during the warmer months, averaging 3,000 cubic feet per second or less, during 50 percent of the time in July, August, and September, and falling to 706 cubic feet per second during the month of minimum flow of record.

6. If the biochemical oxygen demand of the sewage be reduced 90 percent by treatment, the dissolved oxygen in the river water will seldom be less than 50 percent saturation.

Summary of recommendations—it is recommended:

1. That a sewage-treatment plant be built forthwith on the site now owned by the District at Blue Plains, D.C.

2. That the treatment plant be built to serve a population of 650,000, estimated to be tributary about 1950, and so laid out that it can be enlarged to serve a population of at least 850,000, estimated to be tributary about 1970.

3. That the activated-sludge process of treatment be adopted.

4. That the activated-sludge treatment be suspended for the 6 cooler months of the year, during which the treatment will be by plain sedimentation.

5. That the sludge produced be digested in gas-tight heated tanks.

6. That the digested sludge be dewatered by means of vacuum filters.

7. That the dewatered sludge be taken to the District of Columbia penal institutions at Lorton, Va., and utilized for agricultural purposes.

8. That the gas produced by the digestion of the sludge be utilized for generating power for use at the treatment plant, and that the supplemental power, when required, be generated by Diesel engine-driven electric generators.

9. That the hot engine jacket water and the hot exhaust gases, supplemented when more convenient by gas from the digestion tanks, be utilized for heating the sludge undergoing digestion and for furnishing other heat about the plant where required.

RESULTS TO BE OBTAINED BY CARRYING OUT THE RECOMMENDED SEWAGE-DISPOSAL PROJECT

The efficient operation of the sewage-treatment plant herein recommended will produce the following results:

1. The present offensive appearance of the Potomac River will be eliminated.

2. The organic matter carried in suspension in the sewage will be removed to such a degree that extensive deposits of such matter will not be formed in the river and aid in depleting the natural supply of dissolved oxygen in the overlying water.

3. The organic matter in the sewage will be removed to such a degree that the dissolved oxygen in the river water will seldom fall below 50-percent saturation, and major forms of fish life will not be driven away because of lack of oxygen.

4. The present bacterial pollution of the river will be greatly reduced.

5. The river will be attractive in appearance and suitable for navigation, pleasure boating, fishing, and other uses.

6. The sludge produced will be utilized to advantage.

Although the District of Columbia does not have any jurisdiction over areas outside the District, it is assumed in predicting these results, that the sewage of the Washington Suburban Sanitary District, Arlington County, and the city of Alexandria will be so purified that it will not tend to offset and nullify the treatment of the sewage of the District of Columbia.

The greatly improved condition of the Potomac River water will affect favorably the water in the lower Anacostia River by eliminating the present tendency for polluted water to pass from the Potomac River into the Anacostia River with the incoming tides. The Anacostia River, however, has a very small flow during the warmer months, which makes it imperative that the sewage naturally tributary to it from the Washington Suburban Sanitary District be purified to a high degree so that this river will not be objectionable.

With the recommended sewage treatment, the river in and below the District will be much safer for bathing, which is carried on here and there to a limited extent. However, bathing will not be entirely safe on account of the necessary discharge from storm overflows, particularly in the vicinity of the outlets of the storm overflow conduits at times of discharge. It is impracticable to chlorinate or otherwise treat such discharges effectively.

The treatment of the sewage as herein recommended is consistent with the policy of the Federal Government in requiring that navigable waters shall be maintained in a condition which will not interfere with their reasonable use for navigation.

CONTRACT DRAWINGS AND SPECIFICATIONS

After it shall have been decided to proceed with construction it will be necessary to make additional surveys, borings, soil tests, and other preliminary investigations upon which to base the detail designs. It is estimated that a period of 9 months will be required for this preliminary work and for the preparation of designs, drawings, and specifications for the major features of the plant.

TIME REQUIRED TO BUILD PLANT

Many contracts will be required for the construction of the treatment plant. The first work to be undertaken would naturally consist of excavation and building the major structures. While this is going on the machinery and equipment could be built. Climatic conditions are such that construction can be carried out practically continuously throughout the year. It is estimated that a period of about 3 years from the date of award of the first construction contract will be required for the completion of the plant. Thus the total time from beginning of design to putting the plant into operation will be some 3 years 9 months, or say 4 years.

The estimate of the rate of expenditure during this period is as follows:

First year	$500,000
Second year	2,000,000
Third year	3,000,000
Fourth year	2,500,000
Total	8,000,000

Respectfully submitted.

HARRISON P. EDDY,
JOHN H. GREGORY,
SAMUEL A. GREELEY,
Board of Sanitary Engineers.

Mr. Eddy is considered one of the leading, if not the leading, sanitary engineers of the country, and resides in Boston.

Mr. Gregory, a professor from Johns Hopkins University, and Mr. Greeley from Chicago, are also sanitary engineers recognized throughout the country as outstanding along this particular line.

The Bureau of the Budget having for the time being refused to approve the project due to the financial condition of the Treasury, the Commissioners very properly have appealed to the Public Works Administration because the P.W.A. regulations provide specifically that sewage disposal is to be considered a preferential subject in the allocating of money.

The question of employment is also one for consideration in connection with P.W.A. projects. This plan, if undertaken, will furnish employment for 640 men working 3 full years, equivalent to 4,000,000 man-hours.

The Commissioners had a conference with Secretary Ickes and his aides Tuesday afternoon of last week. I have no knowledge of what occurred, but I am aware that when it is shown that it will require $400,000 annually to maintain and operate such a plant, Secretary Ickes will desire to know where this money is coming from. To meet that situation I have today introduced a bill authorizing the Commissioners to construct the plant at a cost not to exceed $8,000,000, and further authorizing such annual appropriations as may be required for maintenance and operation. The bill is short, and reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to remove objectionable sewage pollution from the Potomac River the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct in the District of Columbia, at Blue Plains, a sewage-treatment plant at a cost not to exceed $8,000,000, and such annual appropriations as may be required for the maintenance and operation of said plant shall be made by Congress in the same manner as other appropriations are made for defraying the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia.

Money has already been allocated to Arlington County, Va., by the P.W.A. for sewerage and sewage disposal, but I understand the county officials are waiting to see what is to be done by the District, feeling it is useless to proceed with their plant if the District is not authorized to construct its plant.

Maryland likewise has asked the P.W.A. for an appropriation for the Anacostia River.

Naturally the health of the people of the District is of paramount importance, but aside from that there are other benefits that will accrue if this project is carried out.

It is our duty to safeguard the health of Government officials. Let us say this condition existed in our own community. Is there a man or woman in the Congress who would not join in a movement with local officials to cure the condition? We should do the same by the people of Washington as we would do for those who send us to Congress. I submit the responsibility is ours and we should meet it.

A few weeks ago the House passed a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee of 15 to be known as a "Conservation Committee" and providing that it cooperate with a committee of the Senate. Later, the House apppropriated about $10,000 to assist this committee in its investigation. I think the Senate committee has spent about $50,000.

The purpose of this special committee in part is to submit to the Congress legislation that will stop the pollution of our streams, having in mind the harmful effects of pollution on fish life. The report of the Surgeon General as well as the report of the three sanitary engineers calls attention to this.

Here at our very door we find one of the greatest streams in the country, from a recreation standpoint, polluted by the sewage of the Nation's Capital to such an extent that it is practically devoid of fish life, only the more hardy fish finding it possible to survive.

Can we ask the States to stop the pollution of streams when we permit such a condition to exist?

Few cities in this country have such facilities for recreation at its front door as the Potomac affords.

Stop this pollution and summer resorts will spring up over night on the shores of the Potomac. The land abutting the river will increase in price far above the cost of the project. The people of Washington will spend their money at home rather than travel miles to find a suitable place for bathing. Where there is one motorboat on the river now you will find a hundred and a thousand fishermen will angle in the river where one fishes now.

Let us get behind this project, conserve the health of the people of Washington, and at the same time exploit the recreational facilities of this great river that abuts the Capital of the Nation.

Let us do for Washington what we would do for our own people back home if a similar situation existed there. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman is making an interesting statement about public health in the District of Columbia. May I ask whether or not anything is being done, either by the District authorities or by the Congress, in relation to the incineration of garbage?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I think the present bill takes care of the matter.

Mr. TREADWAY. Was not the question brought up at one time before the Congress and then abandoned later?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I think it was, but if I am not mistaken there is some reference to that in the present bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. I hope that is being considered, because if there is one thing in the District that is disgraceful as well as insanitary it is the burning of refuse right across the river.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is taken care of, I am positive, in the present bill. It is restored.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman says that the Public Works Administration would have to advance 100 percent of the money for the construction of this plant. Is not this a 100-percent American town?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I hope it is.

Mr. RICH. Then why should they not do that?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I hope the Public Works Administration will take that view of the matter. This city is the Capital of the Nation, and, as such, I feel Mr. Ickes would be justified in making this an all-Federal project.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Does the gentleman know of any other city as large as Washington where the untreated sewage is emptied into a navigable stream?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I am sure the gentleman from Texas could answer that question better than I can. Personally I do not know of any city.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. In my own district the P.W.A. has allocated money for a sewage-disposal plant, and I would like to ask the gentleman a question which may help him with his bill. Do not the adjoining States that border on the Potomac River have laws stopping the pollution of these streams by a certain time? We have such a law in our own State and in the neighboring State of Massachusetts.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. This is a navigable stream and is under the control of the United States. The adjoining communities have been allocated money by the P.W.A.

to dispose of their sewage, but they are waiting to see what the District does.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And it is an interstate stream?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Yes; it is an interstate stream.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. FOCHT. Has there been any change in the handling of the sewage or garbage which is carried down below the War College and discharged into the river at that point? I am referring to a condition which I know existed when I was chairman of the committee that had charge of this matter. The sewage then went down below the bridges in large conduits and then out into the Potomac River, and the garbage was sold to contractors. Is this the way the matter is handled now?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. No; they have no way of disposing of the garbage at all at this time other than to sell a small amount to farmers.

Mr. FOCHT. They sell it to contractors, I understand.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. A small amount to farmers only, but I am referring to the general sewage which pollutes the stream for as far as 50 miles below Washington, according to the report which you will find in the RECORD.

Mr. FOCHT. It may pollute the stream, but, as the Supreme Court has declared with respect to the coal dirt in Pennsylvania, it may be an unavoidable necessity. If that is the case, what is the gentleman going to do about it?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. It is not unavoidable, because Major Gotwals has shown just how the matter can be handled. If it can be taken care of it is not an unavoidable necessity.

Mr. FOCHT. By taking it out to the salted sea, which is the only way it can be handled?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. No; it can be handled here by building a disposal plant. The reports show that the engineers say it can be done.

Mr. FOCHT. That cannot take care of the sewage and garbage and the storm water.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Why, certainly it can; the best engineers obtainable say so. Of course, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is a better engineer than Major Gotwals.

Mr. FOCHT. I hope I would be better than a good many that I have known around here.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If the gentleman will get acquainted with the District Engineer Commissioner he will find that he knows something about the sanitary conditions here, after serving the District for many years. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. BYRNS) having assumed the chair, Mr. SEARS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee having had under consideration the bill H.R. 9061, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

PLACE COTTON INDUSTRY ON SOUND COMMERCIAL BASIS

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 8402) to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practice in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8402) to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, 7, 8, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 6, 9, 10, and 19, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert a comma and the following: "but if the President finds that the economic emergency in cotton production and marketing will continue or is likely to continue to exist so that the application of this act with respect to the crop year 1935–36 is imperative in order to carry out the policy declared in section 1, he shall so proclaim, and this act shall be effective with respect to the crop year 1935–36. If at any time prior to the end of the crop year 1935–36 the President finds that the economic emergency in cotton production and marketing has ceased to exist, he shall so proclaim, and no tax under this act shall be levied with respect to cotton harvested after the effective date of such proclamation"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert a comma and the following: "for the crop year 1935–36, if the provisions of this act are effective for such crop year, that two thirds of the persons who have the legal or equitable right as owner, tenant, share-cropper, or otherwise to produce cotton on any cotton farm, or part thereof, in the United States for such crop year"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "$1,000, or by imprisonment for not exceeding 6 months, or both"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert:

"SEC. 24. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to develop new and extended uses for cotton, and for such purpose there is authorized to be made available to the Secretary not to exceed $500,000 out of the funds available to him under section 12 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8402) to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendments nos. 1 and 3: These amendments strike out the provisions of the House bill which make the proposed bill effective for the crop year 1935–36 and which authorize the extension of its provisions for the crop year 1936–37. Amendment no. 1 also strikes out the provision authorizing termination of the bill at any time.

The House recedes with an amendment on amendment no. 1, the effect of which is to make the bill applicable during the crop year 1934–35, to authorize its extension by the President so that it may be applicable during the crop year 1935–36, and to retain the provision of the House bill authorizing the termination of its provisions at any time. Since under the conference agreement on amendment no. 1 the bill will not be applicable to the crop year 1936–37, the House recedes on amendment no. 3.

On amendment no. 2: This amendment strikes out the provision of the House bill providing for a finding by the Secretary of Agriculture that farmers favor a tax for the crop year 1935–36 and a similar finding for succeeding crop years. The amendment also requires a finding for the crop year 1934–35 which was not required under the House bill. See amendment no. 1. The amendment also substitutes for the provision of the House bill requiring a finding that two thirds of the persons who own, rent, share-crop, or control cotton land favor a ginning tax, a provision which requires that two thirds of the persons who have legal or equitable title as owner, tenant, share-cropper, or otherwise to produce cotton on any farm or part thereof for the succeeding crop year favor a ginning tax.

The conference agreement eliminates the finding for the crop year 1934–35, but requires it for the crop year 1935–36 if the bill is to be applicable for that year, and adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment on the finding itself.

On amendment no. 4: This amendment makes the rate of tax 75 percent of the average central price, rather than 50 percent, as contained in the House bill. See amendment no. 5. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 5: This amendment makes the minimum tax 8 cents per pound, rather than 5 cents per pound, as contained in the House bill; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 6: This amendment exempts from the tax all cotton having a staple of 1½ inches in length or longer. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 7: Under the House bill, the tax on nonexempt cotton was postponed until bale tags were secured for it, if the cotton was to be stored by the producer. Bale tags for such cotton could be secured upon payment of the tax or surrender of exemption certificates covering the cotton. This Senate amendment strikes out this provision. The amendment also provides that a producer harvesting more cotton than his allotment of tax-exempt cotton may, in a subsequent year when the tax is in effect, if he does not harvest in the subsequent year the amount of cotton for which he holds certificates, pay the ginning tax on the excess in the prior year with exemption certificates issued for the subsequent year. The amendment further provides that a producer to whom an exemption certificate is issued, who does not use it for the year issued by reason of his producing an amount of cotton less than that represented by the certificates, may use the unused certificate in a subsequent year when the allotment and tax are applicable. The Senate recedes, thus restoring the House provision which authorizes postponement of the payment of the tax and retaining the substance of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment which is covered in the language restored and in other provisions of the bill.

On amendment no. 8: Under the House bill, the allotment of tax-exempt cotton to each State was to be based upon the ratio of its average production for the 5 crop years preceding the enactment of the act to the average national production for the same period. This amendment makes both periods 10 years. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 9: This amendment provides a minimum allotment of 200,000 bales of tax-exempt cotton to each State if in any one of the 5 years preceding the enactment of the act the production of such State equaled 250,000 bales. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 10: Under the House bill no certificate or allotment was to be granted to a producer unless he agreed to comply with requirements to assure his cooperation in reduction programs and to prevent expansion of competitive production by him. This Senate amendment limits the provision so that the requirement preventing expansion of production relates only to expansion on lands leased by the Government. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 11: This amendment strikes out the exception contained in the House bill permitting transportation of cotton beyond the county of production for storage under section 4 (f), in conformity with Senate amendment no. 7, which eliminates the provision with respect to storage. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 12: This amendment reduces the criminal penalty for violation of section 12 (d) (relating to willful violations of the act, willful failure to pay tax, and other crimes) from a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both, to a fine not exceeding $100. The conference agreement makes the punishment a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, or both.

On amendments nos. 13 and 15: The House bill authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to make regulations to carry out the powers given him and provided a fine for violating such regulations. These Senate amendments authorize the Secretary to enact a penal statute to carry out such powers and make violation of the penal statute the offense. The Senate recedes on both amendments.

On amendment no. 14: This amendment provides that no producer shall be taxed or penalized in the ginning of his first six bales and further provides that the total allotment for the crop year 1934–35 shall not exceed 10,000,000 bales. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 16: This amendment reduces from 6 months to 30 days the time, after filing claim for refund of tax, prior to which no suit or proceeding by the taxpayer may be begun for the recovery of the tax paid. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 17: This amendment strikes out the provision of the House bill defining the term "bale" when used in describing a quantity of cotton as 500 pounds of lint cotton, and substitutes therefor a definition of bale as a package containing 500 pounds average gross weight of lint cotton and customary bagging and ties. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 18: This amendment strikes out the provision of the House bill authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase taxable cotton and to dispose of it for charitable purposes, in the development of new and extended uses for cotton, and for other purposes, and which authorized the making of appropriations of funds available to the Secretary of Agriculture under section 12 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The House recedes with an amendment which authorizes the Secretary to develop new and extended uses for cotton and which limits the amount which is authorized to be appropriated from the funds available under such section 12 to $500,000.

On amendment no. 19: This amendment strikes out the amendment contained in the House bill to the Agricultural Adjustment Act authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to include in agreements made under section 8 (1) of that act provisions for the reduction of acreage or production for market of agricultural commodities. The House recedes.

MARVIN JONES,
H. P. FULMER,
WALL DOXEY,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
J. ROLAND KINZER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, the conference report is self-explanatory. In the main the conference report embodies the provisions of the House bill. One change is that the operation of the bill is limited to 1 year, with the privilege of extending it 1 additional year upon proclamation by the President, providing two thirds of those, renters, share croppers, or otherwise, interested in the land, are favorable to such extension.

There is an amendment put in also which exempts long-staple cotton, because this country produces nothing like the amount that is needed.

The Johnson amendment, which provided that a State that produced as much as 250,000 bales should not be reduced below 200,000 bales is retained. The last provision in reference to the amendment of the triple A act, pertaining to competitive crops, is eliminated. The so-called "Boileau amendment", which provided that there shall be no expansion in competitive crops, is retained in the bill, with a qualification limiting its application to lands leased by the Government. The whole cotton-reduction program is based on land leasing. In other words, they will not be permitted to use the land thus leased for competitive crops.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. I understand the bill as framed now is limited to 1 year. When we had the discussion in the House, if I remember correctly, the gentleman from Texas said that, if limited to 1 year, it would be inoperative and of no value.

Mr. JONES. No. I stated in order to have the full effect, to have it work properly, we should have it for longer than 1 year. So we now provide that it may be extended the second year if it appears needed and the President so decides. We retain the House provision, but omit the middle year. In the original House bill, in order to extend it the second year, it was required that two thirds of those engaged in production should favor it. In other words, the original act provided that it was for 1 year, with the privilege of extending it 1 year, and then a third year in addition, by proclamation of the President.

We have omitted the middle year and given them the privilege of extending it the second year in the same manner that it could have been extended the third year by proclamation of the President.

Mr. SNELL. What is the amendment of section 24?

Mr. JONES. Under the original House bill, the Secretary of Agriculture was permitted to use any of the cotton funds under the triple A act in the purchase of cotton subject to taxation, and use it in a search for new and extended uses of cotton and its distribution. The Senate objected to that provision, but indicated that they had no objection to a search for new and extended uses of cotton. The Secretary under the conference bill is not authorized to purchase cotton. We modified it to that extent.

Mr. SNELL. What does the gentleman mean by new and extended uses? Does he mean in foreign countries?

Mr. JONES. It might be in foreign countries or in this country—any new channels in which cotton might be used. Practically all commodities of any consequence have some search made along those lines. For instance, there is the Forest Products Laboratory at Madison, Wis., which has been doing research in new uses of forest products for many years, and has done very valuable work. A great many people think that while a measure of this kind may be necessary to clear the decks of the overhanging surpluses that have been wrecking the market for the past few years, yet, as a long-range proposition, the question of the marketing and the fields and channels in which a great commodity of this kind must go is perhaps the most or, at least, a very important feature of any program.

Mr. SNELL. Of course, that is a great deal more than any one other industry has, is it not?

Mr. JONES. Oh, no. We appropriated at one time as much as $800,000 for the Forest Products Laboratory. Besides, this comes out of the cotton funds, I will state to the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. Even if it does, it is a special fund.

Mr. JONES. I know; but if those who are to receive the benefits under the program, instead of receiving the benefits, would prefer that a small part of that fund should be used in searching for new and extended uses of the commodity, I do not see how anyone can object.

Mr. SNELL. Does it come out of a processing tax?

Mr. JONES. Yes, or out of the funds collected under this bill.

Mr. SNELL. The people who make paper bags up in my country have to pay for a processing tax and then have to pay for their share toward this tax.

Mr. JONES. It may come out of the taxes collected under this bill and probably will.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman admits that a lot of this money comes from people not directly interested in cotton.

Mr. JONES. Of course, if you have any tax, if you use the fund, you cannot say that somewhere along the line it will not touch somebody else. I cannot see how the gentleman can seriously object to a search for new markets for cotton.

Mr. SNELL. It depends on what the search is. It has been the policy of the administration not to search in foreign countries.

Mr. JONES. I do not agree with the gentleman. Then on that basis the cotton people could object to the forest products laboratory, because wood pulp and fiber rayon have for years been cutting into the channels used by cotton in the form of rayon and other commodities. You cannot have a national program where you will never approach or touch elbows with somebody else.

Mr. SNELL. Let me ask one more question. What proportion of cotton is already planted at this time?

Mr. JONES. That is a very difficult question to answer, but only a small percentage.

Mr. SNELL. I understood that at the time this bill passed the House, say, a month or 6 weeks ago, it had to be passed at once, because the cotton was practically planted at that time.

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman is familiar with the geography of the United States, he will know that one part of Texas ranges pretty far south.

Mr. SNELL. I am familiar with what the gentleman said at that time, whether I am familiar with the geography of the United States or not.

Mr. JONES. And I say to the gentleman that they plant cotton from a month to 2 months earlier in that part of Texas than they do in my district.

Mr. SNELL. I am stating what the gentleman said on the floor of the House—that we would have to have it 6 weeks ago, or it would not do any good this year.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman is evidently not familiar with the planting of cotton. I did not say it would not do any good. I did say that it was preferable to have it before any of the cotton was planted.

Mr. SNELL. Oh, I admit that I am not; but I am taking what the gentleman stated at that time.

Mr. JONES. I stated at that time—and I still stick to my guns—that they were planting cotton in south Texas, and if we came here 3 weeks from now, they would still be planting cotton in some parts of Texas.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. I understood the gentleman from Texas, in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], to say that the President cannot extend this act for another year without a two-thirds vote of the cotton producers?

Mr. JONES. That is correct.

Mr. HASTINGS. And I should like to have the gentleman discuss a little more in detail what noncompetitive crops may be planted on this surplus unused cotton land?

Mr. JONES. The gentleman is familiar with the cotton voluntary reduction program. The contracts call for a designation of those crops by the Department, and in each vicinity they will furnish information as to what crops may or may not be grown. The cotton program is an acreage-reduction program. It forbids their using idle land, which will probably amount to some 15,000,000 or 16,000,000 acres, in the expansion of any competitive crop or commodity.

Mr. HASTINGS. I wish the gentleman, in revising his remarks, would go a little more into this in detail, because the country is very much interested in that feature.

Mr. JONES. It is practically impossible to make a general statement that would cover the entire country on that. It is an administrative problem that must be varied somewhat in the different localities. I think, at least as a temporary matter, that the cotton people would be better off to have a program than not to have a program, even if they left those lands perfectly idle.

They are lands leased by the Government, and a man will be permitted to plant just what those administering it define as noncompetitive crops, and will be permitted to plant no other. The Government leases and pays for the land.

Mr. HASTINGS. Of course, the chairman of the committee knows that it is getting a little late in the season.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. And the farmers must know, and must know at once, what they can plant on these surplus lands.

Mr. JONES. All that has practically been determined by the voluntary program. A vast majority of the cotton producers have signed up on these voluntary programs, and they have practically the same provisions in the voluntary contracts which they will have under this plan. The Department has furnished people in all localities the essential information as to what they may plant, and I am sure that the information is in the hands of the county agents in the districts which the gentleman represents.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. There is nothing in the bill to prevent the planting of foodstuffs for use on the plantations and farms, is there?

Mr. JONES. Not for use by the people who own the land.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. BUSBY. Will the gentleman inform us what penalties are provided in the bill at the present time for violation of its terms?

Mr. JONES. The penalties for violating the act which we talked about when we first had the measure under consideration range from a fine not exceeding $1,000 to imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, and for violation of a regulation the penalty is a fine not exceeding $200.

Mr. BUSBY. Does the gentleman mean that for violation of a regulation a person may be fined; that a man may be fined because he violates some regulation promulgated by the Department of Agriculture which regulation is not in this bill?

Mr. JONES. It must be a regulation authorized by the terms of this bill and within the four corners of this bill.

Mr. BUSBY. But it is to be pronounced by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. JONES. Why, of course. The gentleman has never voted for any law that required any administration at all that did not provide for some regulation, because the gentleman knows that regulations are essential. The gentleman knows further that were we to incorporate in a bill every regulation to carry out a program covering as wide a stretch of the country as this must necessarily cover we would have a wholly unworkable bill.

Mr. BUSBY. The gentleman from Texas knows that we construe penal laws strictly and we write the penal statutes verbatim into the law; but we do not instruct a lot of subordinates and bureaucrats to enact penal statutes under which people on farms may be sent to jail. The gentleman knows that. I should like to pursue the matter further. I notice an exemption is made in the case of cotton the staple of which is 1½ inches long.

Mr. JONES. There may be some of that in the gentleman's own State.

Mr. BUSBY. I do not care about that; what I am concerned with is that there should be an exemption of any cotton from taxation if cotton is to be taxed.

Mr. JONES. As the gentleman knows, there is a distinct field for long staple cotton, and even in times when we have had great surpluses of the ordinary variety of cotton in this country we import long-staple cotton to fill that particular field.

Mr. BUSBY. Why exempt it from this tax? Are not the growers of long-staple cotton cotton growers just like the others except they grow a higher-priced cotton?

Mr. JONES. Does the gentleman want an answer to his question or does he just want to ask a lot of questions?

Mr. BUSBY. If the gentleman will yield me some time I will let him alone. Will the gentleman yield me 10 minutes?

Mr. JONES. I will yield the gentleman 5 minutes but I cannot yield the gentleman further time because I promised to take but a limited time in the discussion of this conference report. But first, however, I insist on answering the gentleman's question. There is a very limited acreage suitable for the growing of long-staple cotton.

Far less long-staple cotton is grown in the country than is consumed. There is no surplus problem of any kind connected with long-staple cotton, and this is an exemption of this particular type of cotton.

Mr. BUSBY. It is the creation of a special class.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas yields to me for the specific purpose of answering the question of the gentleman from Mississippi. The gentleman has reference to page 6 of the bill, amendment 4, made by the Senate:

> Cotton having a staple of 1½ inches in length alone.

That amendment applies only to the State of Arizona. It is in its infancy in the production of cotton. This exemption covers only about 9,000 bales in the United States.

As to the argument that the exemption makes a special class, that does not fit the case, because in our State we have no cotton that will pull an inch and a half, and this long-staple cotton that is grown in Arizona enters into direct competition with Egyptian cotton; and there is no surplus of this grade of cotton.

Mr. BUSBY. Why should we do anything to encourage the production of cotton, when the very purpose of the bill is to curtail production?

Mr. JONES. In order to be fair to a struggling State in fostering a very promising infant industry.

Mr. BUSBY. One other question: Why exempt States that have not grown 1,000 bales of cotton over a 5-year period?

Mr. JONES, I think the gentleman will find there are but two States affected by this provision.

Mr. BUSBY. But if the bill is designed to bring all cotton growers into line why exempt some of them?

Mr. JONES. Some of these States have gone into cotton production in comparatively recent years and there is no surplus in those States. They have become accustomed only in recent years to the production of cotton. In order to be fair to all the different States it was necessary to go back over a range of years. Then to be fair to the newer States it was necessary to insert the provision referred to.

We went over that range of years in these particular States and they do not produce enough cotton to materially affect the program.

It is only to the effect that cotton may be reduced to between 125,000 and 150,000 bales in California. It will be limited to 200,000 at the most.

Mr. BUSBY. May I ask one more question? Was not the purpose in making these concessions to get support in the Senate so that the bill could be passed?

Mr. JONES. I am not authorized to speak on the motives of the Senate. I have been surprised by them many times. But it was not necessary in the House. I think we could pass it with or without the amendment.

Mr. BUSBY. Is the opposition going to have time to speak against the report?

Mr. JONES. I hope the gentleman will not insist on much time. I will give him some time.

Mr. BUSBY. How about 10 minutes?

Mr. JONES. I will give the gentleman 5 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am very much interested in the amendment stricken out on page 25, the last section of the bill, amendment no. 19. As I understand it, that was passed by the House and stricken out in the Senate. Its object was to protect the growers of nonbasic agricultural products, such as are raised in New England, garden truck, fruit, poultry, milk, cheese, butter, eggs, and various items of that kind, the products of New England. I have a telegram from a group of New England farmers, representing the associations up there, bitterly opposing the opportunity the cotton growers will have of taking up land for products competitive to our nonbasic New England agricultural products. Under leave to extend my remarks, I insert the telegram referred to, as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., April 6, 1934.

One hundred fifty representatives of poultry, potato, market-gardening, and fruit industries from six New England States in informal conference assembled here today. Urge the inclusion of an amendment to the Bankhead bill giving the Secretary of Agriculture authority to prohibit signers of contracts on basic commodities from increasing production for sale of nonbasic commodities. We request that you communicate this action to Senators and Representatives from New England States and also inform conferees of action taken. This shall be in no way construed as an endorsement of other features of the Bankhead bill.

GEORGE M. PUTNAM,
President New Hampshire Farm Bureau Federation.

What is the gentleman's idea as to why the amendment was not left in the bill?

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman will turn to page 10, insofar as this bill is concerned, practically the same thing is accomplished. The particular amendment at the end is an amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration generally.

Mr. TREADWAY. I realize that.

Mr. JONES. That was bitterly objected to by a great many people in different parts of the country.

Mr. TREADWAY. By whom?

Mr. JONES. It was not objected to by the southern people, I may say to the gentleman. The objection was made by the people from other sections of the country.

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly not by the people of New England.

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman will go to the RECORD he will find the Senators who objected, and they stated they did not want this to apply all along the line. The amendment that the gentleman is talking about is an amendment to the A.A.A. Act.

Mr. TREADWAY. I realize that.

Mr. JONES. We have the same thing insofar as this act is concerned.

Mr. TREADWAY. The language that is stricken out is very plain. We see exactly what it does. When we turn to page 10 there is a complication of language that might be interpreted most any old way by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. JONES. May I say further to the gentleman that the same provisions are in the cotton contracts that were signed under the voluntary program? The objection, I may say to the gentleman, was raised largely by people who were not from the South.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is it not possible under the law and under this bill as the gentleman expects it to be enacted, to substitute for the basic cotton the product of the lands you are withdrawing, nonbasic agricultural commodities?

Mr. JONES. Not of a competitive variety.

Mr. TREADWAY. What does the gentleman mean by "competitive variety"?

Mr. JONES. Anything that competes on a national scale. This will be determined largely by regulations of the Department, which must be adjusted in order to fit the whole agricultural program.

Mr. TREADWAY. Take Maine potatoes that go into the Boston and New York markets. They are competitive.

Mr. JONES. They are limited. I assume that situation will be covered. But I am not going to undertake to solve all of the problems of administration. I think those in charge will administer it in a way that will be fair to all concerned. At least, that will be their purpose.

Mr. TREADWAY. Take as an illustration what is ordinarily known as "garden truck."

Mr. JONES. I would not want to go into a field that I am not thoroughly versed in, but this will not permit competition on a commercial scale in connection with any of these articles. That is as far as I can go.

Mr. TREADWAY. But that does not cover the objections of the people I am in touch with.

Mr. JONES. I am sorry.

Mr. TREADWAY. When they are raising garden truck or have a hennery and ship eggs to New York, they do not know whether they are raising and marketing competitive or noncompetitive products.

Mr. JONES. I do not think the gentleman will have any complaint at all. The administration so far has not run into serious difficulties along that line. That is the best I can give the gentleman.

Mr. TREADWAY. I know the gentleman wants to deal in generalities. Our experience for the past year shows that is true.

Mr. JONES. The cotton contracts will still be in effect and this provision on page 10, in my judgment, the amendment by Mr. BOILEAU, is stronger than the one that has been stricken out.

Mr. TREADWAY. It does not cover nonbasic products.

Mr. JONES. There will not be anything taken away from the protection which the gentleman now has.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman think that the farmers of this country are going to be well satisfied with the power of the Secretary of Agriculture to tell them what they shall do with their lands?

Mr. JONES. I do not know. I hope they will be satisfied with the program. I feel that if they lease their land to the Government under the voluntary program, which they have had a right to do, they certainly should not complain if the party that has leased and paid for the land has something to say about what goes on. I think they will be satisfied with it.

Mr. RICH. When the time comes that we try to tell the people of this country—agriculture of business—just what they can do, where will be the freedom of the citizens of this country?

Mr. JONES. Oh, nobody is advocating any such proposition. This can be ended at any time; and any time they manifest a desire to have this ended, that will be done.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The distinguished chairman of the committee represents a section of country that is comparable with western Oklahoma. I am very much interested in the man who produces a small amount of cotton and I should like to get the gentleman's reaction to amendment no. 14, which sought to provide a minimum amount of cotton that could be produced by any individual farmer. I should like to have the gentleman's explanation of whether or not there could be allowed a minimum number of bales and if such a proposition would work out in a satisfactory manner.

Mr. JONES. I may state to the gentleman that those who have had charge of the cotton program heretofore regarded that as complicated and wholly unworkable. They felt there would be a terrible amount of work involved in determining just who was entitled to grow cotton and that it meant, practically, the same as striking out the enacting clause of the bill, in view of the great number who are engaged in the growing of cotton. There are some 2,000,000 such farmers, and if we gave them each six bales, of course, they would all claim their exemption, because they could dispose of their exemption tags. There may be some way of making 12,000,000 go into 10,000,000, but I was never able to find it in any arithmetic that I have studied.

In addition to this, there would be any number of people who, at some time, may have had land that had grown cotton and they would claim their exemption. This was regarded as wholly unworkable and if you have this only for 1 year, with a possibility of 2 years, I think the purpose can be accomplished better by having it as simplified as possible.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I wanted the gentleman to put that statement in the RECORD and I wish to make one further observation. In the section of the country I represent, which is similar to the section of the country that the gentleman from Texas represents, there are many who are capable of planting cotton that have not grown this crop in the past. Does the gentleman feel that the 5-year computation would have been better than the 10-year computation, taking into consideration the fact that the 10-year computation would have allowed new growers of cotton a little more leeway?

Mr. JONES. I may state to the gentleman it is impossible to answer that question categorically. There would be a little shade of difference when you take the different periods, but taking the country over it seemed this was about as fair a basis as we could get. We tried to safeguard the very proposition the gentleman is talking about by stipulating that 10 percent should be held back for the purpose of caring for the shift in population and for new production and I think this will take care of that situation insofar as possible. They are dovetailing this into the voluntary-allotment program and trying to fit it into that program. They wish to clear the decks and give us relief from the overhanging surplus which has heretofore tended to depress the market.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Is the gentleman in position to give the House a short statement as to the number of acres that are now in cotton production and the amount it has been stated this will be increased this year, for the purpose of showing that unless there is some method to bring about a reduction of acreage, increased foreign production will have a marked effect upon domestic production in this country and will especially affect the price?

Mr. JONES. In the voluntary program they have tried to reduce from something just above 40,000,000 acres to around 25,000,000 acres this year, never intending at any time to surrender the foreign market, but simply to bring about an adjustment which is for the best interests of the farmers in this country in selling their cotton. We hope to sell all we can abroad, and we hope to retain a market abroad, but we certainly do not want a continuation of the 4- or 5-cent cotton which we had at the time this program was started.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Then the gentleman is of the opinion that something must be done to curtail the yield per year in this country?

Mr. JONES. At least for the time being, and then I hope the program can go along normally.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Under the voluntary plan that has been signed by a great many farmers, the Government pays a rental on the land taken out of the production of cotton.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Then there is a small number who have signed no contract. If they go ahead and comply and reduce their acreage, because of the penalty provided in the law, will they get any pay for their land taken out of production?

Mr. JONES. They will not unless they sign the voluntary contract.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Have they had a chance to sign it?

Mr. JONES. I am not sure, but after it was certain that this bill would pass, they had a chance to sign, and if they were not willing to cooperate to save the South from bankruptcy I have not much sympathy for them.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BUSBY].

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I come from Mississippi, which State grows cotton. I have made some investigation in my section of the State, and have not been able to find anybody who has been asked to give his consent, as is alleged was done, for the proposal laid down in this Bankhead bill. There may be a few, but not many, I am sure.

Cotton is not only grown in the United States, but is grown in many parts of the world. Last year the world cotton crop was about 25,000,000 bales, of which 51 percent was grown in the United States, or a little over 12,500,000 bales.

Almost the same amount was grown in other parts of the world. Now, if we reduce our production to 10,000,000 bales and the other parts of the world only grow 12,500,000 bales, instead of 51 percent we will be growing 40 percent, and the rest of the world will be growing 60 percent. As a result we will lose the benefits of the sale of that portion of the cotton in the markets of the world, and it will not help the southern farmers in the proportion that they cut down their production. We will assist the foreign cotton raiser.

We will go to the market with three quarters of the crop and the rest of the world with a full crop and then some, because they will increase their production while we curtail ours. In 1884 we produced 4 out of 5 bales of cotton grown; under this bill we will produce 2 bales out of 5 bales of cotton grown in this year, 1935.

UNITED STATES TO WORLD COTTON MARKET

We are fixing to lose our market, and irretrievably we are surrendering to other parts of the world that which has been ours throughout generations of the past. You northwestern farmers, listen. We buy much of our feed and hay and corn from you. If you think that you are helping yourselves by playing a joke on the South in putting this thing upon the cotton farmers, we will turn around and produce our own feed, our own hay on vacant lands, our own cattle, our own butter, and we will cease to be your customers in time to come, just as we are losing the world market for cotton, you are losing the South as a market for your corn, feed, and hogs. It is a short-sighted policy we are pursuing. We cannot lift ourselves by a processing tax. We cannot get out of this financial slump by climbing up on each other's shoulders. It will not work. Every time you lay a processing tax on a section of the country to support another section, you are taking part of the wages that the people in that section are earning, and you are lessening their buying power. What we are doing is not creating wealth. Trying to get out of this depression by climbing upon each other's shoulders, without increasing wealth a bit. You may increase prices for a time, but you cannot increase wealth except by production. You are not helping the South when you say that "we will put a processing tax in favor of the South and increase the cost of living to all, then we will levy a tariff in favor of the North and thereby increase living cost to all"; that we will do this thing for the hog raiser, and this thing for the wheat raiser, that we will get out of this thing by climbing upon each other's shoulders with high costs of living the only final result.

I am against this legislation because of another thing. It takes from the landowner the last vestige of control over his property. It takes the boys from the families that work the farms, from the families that labor to produce, unless they first get a ticket from the Secretary of Agriculture authorizing them to produce a limited number of bales of cotton.

It robs us of the fundamentals that we have cherished and relied on and boasted of as being the foundation stones of this great Government. I ask you to vote against this conference report. If you do not do it, in 3 years you will rue the day when you voted to approve this kind of legislation, seeking to escape through this means that which is inevitable. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, a planless agriculture in the presence of a planned industry would, in my judgment, condemn the South to a continuation of the conditions that have existed down there at intervals for many years. If the industry of the country were on a planless basis, if the automobile factories had been running full tilt during all of this depression, automobiles would be selling for $100 apiece, and we could have afforded to have 5-cent cotton. But they have adjusted their production to their demands, and if we are going to live in the presence of that, we would better take similar steps ourselves, even though in working out a general program we may make a mistake or two. There are more than 10,000,000 bales of cotton in the carryover. If nothing is done about it, it probably means 5- or 6-cent cotton again. Does anyone wish that? It is not a question of surrendering world markets. No one wishes to do that. If we produced no cotton at all this year we could still furnish the world with cotton to meet the demands. We are simply trying to adjust back to a normal basis. No one knows what the results of this bill will be. But for years other plans have failed. The farmers want to try it. If it does not work properly, it can be ended.

I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BYRNS). The question now recurs on the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote because there is no quorum present.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 45.

Mr. BUSBY. I object to the vote because there is no quorum present.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote, and make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 235, nays 105, not voting 91, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. RAINEY, and he voted "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. JONES, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that my colleague on Subcommittee No. 3 of the Committee on Military Affairs, the gentleman from New Hampshire, Mr. ROGERS, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. HARTER, the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. JAMES, the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. Goss, and the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. PLUMLEY, are detained in connection with work on the subcommittee and are therefore unable to vote.

EQUALIZATION OF TAXATION

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide relief, to equalize taxation, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. DOUGHTON, SAMUEL B. HILL, CULLEN, TREADWAY, and BACHARACH.

JOHN J. BLAINE

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I regret to announce that John J. Blaine, recent Senator from the State of Wisconsin, died yesterday. He was a man well and popularly known throughout my State for a quarter of a century, from the days when he was State senator. Subsequently he served as attorney general, as Governor of the State for three terms, and as United States Senator. At the time of his death he was a director of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of this Government.

Mr. Blaine was an outstanding official, known to the whole people of my State for his undoubted courage and ability. On behalf of my colleagues I express the sympathy we all feel for his family and host of friends in their bereavement.

As I was about to make this announcement I received a telegram stating that Justice Walter Owen, of the supreme court, one of my closest friends, also a former State senator and attorney general of the State, died yesterday at the same time with Mr. Blaine in Wisconsin. Thus the State of Wisconsin has lost two distinguished men who were highly honored by its people. Again we express our sympathy in this double loss to our State.

DISASTER PREPAREDNESS

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including an address by my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BOEHNE], delivered at the Red Cross Convention.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement of Hon. JOHN W. BOEHNE, JR., member of the board of directors of the Evansville Chapter, American Red Cross, before the round-table conference of the American Red Cross held in Washington, D.C., April 9, 1934:

The Evansville (Ind.) Chapter of the American Red Cross feels highly honored that it has been requested to present to this round-table conference its complete set-up on disaster preparedness. We feel quite proud of the work that our special disaster preparedness committee has done, and I hope that the information which I will give to you will be of benefit to similar committees throughout the Nation. Evansville has been very fortunate in that very few major disasters have been visited upon it, but, of course, we never know when lightning will strike. For that reason we insist that this committee be in readiness at all times, and that its membership know exactly what is to be expected of it at the moment it is called upon to serve.

This disaster preparedness committee was formed in September 1930, at which time a group of the busiest business men of Evansville came together and selected the entire committee and named the various subcommittees.

Good propaganda, of course, is always worth while. Each year we have what we now know as an annual disaster preparedness day. On this day the entire committee meets and studies a typical type of disaster problem, so that each committee member may refresh in his mind the duties that are his. This meeting is always held in October, just prior to the annual drive. This in itself is excellent publicity for the drive. The mayor of the city proclaims that day as annual disaster preparedness day, and naturally the local newspapers carry stories about the work of the committee. Fortunately one of the local newspapers employs a very clever cartoonist, who is tremendously interested in the city, and he always displays a very appropriate cartoon on this subject. In addition to this, all the schools in the city take part in that the various school classes, particularly the upper grammar grades and the high-school grades, prepare essays on what each child would feel to be his duty in the event of a major disaster.

We also enlist the aid of the Boy Scouts, who are very active in our city.

We find that our standing disaster preparedness committee is one of our biggest selling points to the public. The night of this preparedness day the entire committee, composed of approximately 20 members, meets at one of our country clubs for a dinner and a program.

For several years after we formed our committee we always were able to secure a speaker of national importance from headquarters at Washington. We have now graduated to the point where we feel it is time to provide our own program.

For our last meeting we had Mr. Maurice Reddy send us a typical disaster problem, which was somewhat like the Knickerbocker disaster of a few years ago. We have quite a large Coliseum in Evansville, and the disaster problem covered the work that would be necessary upon the complete collapse of that building while it was fully occupied. Copies of this program were sent to all the disaster committee members at least 10 days in advance of the meeting, and the various subcommittee chairmen were asked to meet with their own subcommittees and be prepared to tell exactly what part they should play. This particular meeting was the best that the committee has ever had.

To show you how thoroughly the job was done, I want to give you some of the details that were worked out by the subcommittee chairmen with their subcommittees. The chairman of the clothing subcommittee, for instance, knew exactly how many blankets he should secure and where he could secure them. The chairman of the shelter subcommittee had made a complete survey of the downtown section and knew where every empty building was located, and the capacity of every such building. The chairman of the food subcommittee had in advance wired the Indiana State National Guard at Indianapolis and had found out how many rolling kitchens were available on very short notice and how they could be secured. The chairman of medical aid had called every hospital and had a definite doctor scheduled to go to the scene of the disaster and other doctors ordered to remain at the hospitals to receive injured patients. In addition to this, he had made arrangements for several large buildings in the vicinity of the Coliseum, where first-aid stations were to be erected. He had secured the exact floor space of these buildings and came prepared to tell the committee the exact capacity of each building—how many patients each building would house.

It was really one of the most inspiring meetings the disaster preparedness committee has ever had. The interest manifested by those busy business men was astonishing. At the conclusion it was unanimously decided that this should be repeated not annually but at least semiannually. In order that nothing should be overlooked, our very efficient secretary, Miss Mary Bailey, through her office staff called on the chairman of each subcommittee, who in turn was asked to check up on his subcommittee to see if there were any vacancies due to death or removal from the city. Should such vacancies occur, the subcommittee chairmen have the authority to fill such vacancies immediately. Aside from this, a complete and accurate list of the entire disaster preparedness committee, with the names of the various subcommittee chairmen, and his subcommittees, with home addresses and telephone numbers, is on file at each one of the telegraph offices, as well as with the Indiana Bell Telephone Co.

Naturally, it is quite important to be sure of the men who are to serve as subcommittee chairmen. We have been especially interested in seeing to it that only those men whose particular line of work would dovetail with their proposed work in a major disaster would be selected. For instance, the chairman of the subcommittee on clothing is Mr. R. C. Smith, who is the head of our largest department store. Likewise his committee members are chosen from that field. The chairman of the subcommittee on food is Mr. Clarence Kahn, who is manager of our largest wholesale produce house.

The chairman of the subcommittee on medical aid is Dr. W. W. Hewins, one of Evansville's ablest physicians and surgeons. The chairman of the subcommittee on purchasing is Mr. H. A. Woods, a very prominent merchant and active head of a chain of drug stores. The chairman of the subcommittee on shelter is Mr. Henry Schroeder, manager of the Sunbeam Electric Manufacturing Co., and whose committee has made a very careful survey of the housing facilities of the city. His committee members represent lumber companies, as well as awning and tent supplies. Our chairman of the subcommittee on intelligence is Mr. A. A. Brantano, active manager of a very large printing establishment. Our chairman of finance is a leading banker of Evansville, Mr. Frank R. Wilson, vice president of the Old National Bank. Our chairman on the subcommittee of transportation and communication is Mr. Henry Koch, who is the head of several large companies and has a fleet of trucks at his command.

Evansville is fortunate in having a radio station—WGBF. The manager of that station, Mr. Clarence Leich, is very much interested in our work, and has of his own accord set up a short-wave radio set operating independently of city current and placed at the transmitter of WGBF, 8 miles north of Evansville on Highway No. 41. This has been done so that information could be sent out in the event a disaster would wreck the local radio station. The call letters of this short-wave set are W9AIN and it is constantly in readiness to operate day and night.

We do not consider our set-up perfect at all. We feel though that we have gotten a good start. We attribute the present standing of our disaster preparedness committee largely to the fact that the committee itself meets frequently and every member of it is reminded of his duties and responsibilities at the time of a disaster, which, of course, everyone hopes will never occur. We hope that what little we have done will be of benefit to the American Red Cross.

CONSERVATION AND CITIZENSHIP

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including an excellent address delivered over the radio by the Speaker of this House on the subject of citizenship and conservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following splendid address of Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY, Speaker of the House of Representatives, over the National Broadcasting Co. network on Sunday, April 8, 1934:

CONSERVATION AND CITIZENSHIP

Twenty-five years ago, when the first Roosevelt was President of the United States, we commenced, under his leadership, to realize the importance of conservation. We commenced to realize then, rather dimly, that it required millions of years to prepare the world for the habitation of men.

For millions of years the earth revolved on its axis and completed its yearly journeys around the sun while vegetation flourished and grew and died; while great forests spread over the earth, attained their maturity and died; and other growths of vegetation and other forests grew on the remains of the dead vegetation and in turn perished and died. In this way our great coal fields developed and our deposits of oil were made. All this was essential in order to prepare the world for the sustenance of animal life, and after millions of years the process of the creation of the world had developed to such an extent that it was possible for animal life to appear, and finally the world was made fit for the habitation of man. Its vast stores of coal, iron ore, gold, silver, and oil had developed and decaying vegetation had resulted in rich, black fertile soil, capable of producing the cereals necessary to maintain men and animals. The land had appeared; the waters had receded; rivers pursued their courses down from the mountains to the sea; abundant life was possible.

An all-wise Creator turned all this valuable heritage over to the race of men He created; and we commenced to waste and destroy it. The period of the world's history marked by the presence of men on the earth is inconsiderable in length as compared to the millions of years required to make the world a safe habitation for men and animals. We proceeded then rapidly to destroy the heritage which has been prepared for us. Forests commenced to disappear and deserts took their places. Great civilizations developed and flourished and, with the destruction of natural resources, faded from the earth.

It is only in recent years that we have commenced to realize that what remains of the natural resources prepared for us must be preserved, and not destroyed. At the present time our coal fields are being rapidly depleted. Thousands of oil wells, three times as many as are needed, have been sunk, and salt water has been permitted to permeate the pools of oil. Overproduction has been rapidly at work in recent years destroying this valuable heritage.

They realized in Germany long before we did the necessity of preserving their national resources. It is impossible in Germany, and has been for many years, to cut down a tree on your own land without permission from the proper conservation official of the Government. When trees are cut, provision must be made for replanting. In a recent trip through Germany I was impressed with their magnificent forests. Germany has all the timber she needs for all purposes, but trees are cut scientifically and replanting is done as directed by the Government.

From Berlin I traveled through northern Poland. The country was bare and desolate of trees. During the World War this part of Poland was occupied by Germany. When it became necessary for her military commanders to build in northern France during the World War the longest line of defenses ever constructed on the face of the earth—the Hindenburg line—she was able to accomplish it without impoverishing her forests. The Hindenburg line was largely built of trees, and the trees were obtained, not from her own magnificent forests, but from the forests of northern Poland, and carried on railoads five or six hundred miles through Poland and Germany and into northern France. She lost millions of men in battle; but her natural resources were not disturbed; they were preserved for future generations of Germans, and her forests will stand.

Recently the ruins of a magnificent city were discovered in a remote part of the Desert of Sahara, indicating that where this great desert now exists there were once vast fertility and forests and rivers. The civilization indicated by these ruins could have existed under no other environment, and this civilization grew and developed and perished from the earth long before the period of recorded history. But the ruins recently discovered are evidence of the fact that reckless use of natural resources eventually destroyed the soil which made possible the production of life-sustaining crops and which made possible the existence of animal life. With the destruction of vegetation and soil the rivers which must have existed disappeared and a vast expanse of sand took the place of what were at a remote period fertile lands capable of sustaining cities and perhaps a large population outside of the cities.

Recently, aviators discovered, 1,000 miles from Jerusalem, the remains of an ancient city with its palaces, its towers, and its extensive burial grounds. It was, they say, the capital city of the vast, fertile, rich empire of the Queen of Sheba, but evidently a disregard of the fundamentals of conservation as the centuries passed destroyed the civilization which once existed there, and the population there now consists, the aviators tell us, of a few wandering tribes of warlike Arabs who guard with superstitious reverence what remains of the ruins of the ancient capital city of the Queen of Sheba.

A bill will come up in Congress next week intended to preserve what remains of vegetation on our national domain. We are told in the hearings that owners of great flocks of sheep insist upon driving flocks, thousands of them in every flock, onto the public domain where the already sparse vegetation is being destroyed. The sheep eat the grass, roots and all, and vast sections of the public domain are being converted into a desert. A vigorous fight will be made, we are advised, by the owners of these great herds to insist upon the privileges they have heretofore enjoyed, and those privileges involve the destruction of the vegetation on millions of acres of land, and possibly the creation of another great waterless desert in the western section of the United States. They insist upon the continuance indefinitely of the privileges they now enjoy, which involve the inevitable destruction of plant life in all that section.

As vegetation is destroyed, rainfall stops, rivers and streams disappear, wild life vanishes, and a desert is created. Something like this must have happened to the civilizations which preceded recorded history of which there remains only the mute evidence of ruined cities.

Forests at the headwaters of our rivers are at the present time rapidly disappearing; and with the disappearance of forest growth, floods held back by trees and vegetation are no longer retarded and rivers quickly become raging torrents as they plunge on down to the sea. Rainfall decreases on the areas which were formerly covered by forests and that part of the world in which we live is now too rapidly deteriorating as our population increases, and we are commencing to realize that conservation must be more vigorously promoted than in past years.

I am thoroughly in sympathy with the efforts of the Educational Conservation Society. The place to commence a program of conservation is in the schools. Those who are to come after we are gone must be educated now as to the importance of the preservation of trees, of grasslands, of coal, of oil, and of wild life. All of us who are now living can live out our lives perhaps without serious inconvenience, but it is an obligation which we must realize to preserve natural resources for generations yet unborn.

Only God can make a tree; it takes a hundred years of time to do it. A few years ago in a western forest a giant redwood tree crashed. The Bureau of Forestry sawed through the tree and studied the rings which indicated its annual growth and issued a little bulletin, The Story of a Tree. By the study of the growth rings they found the tree was standing and was a monarch of the forest when Christ lived on the earth. Biblical stories of droughts were verified by decreased tree growth during those particular periods described in Biblical history. This bulletin ought to be reprinted and circulated in schools to stimulate an interest in tree life.

It takes a small forest of trees to produce one edition of a great metropolitan Sunday newspaper, with all its supplements, and small trees are rapidly being destroyed and converted into pulpwood in order to produce the vast amount of paper used in the Sunday editions of these great newspapers. A substitute can be found for pulpwood and we are gradually promoting the business of the manufacture of paper out of corn stalks and out of straw. This industry ought to be encouraged and, if necessary, subsidized by legislative action.

We recently appointed a House committee to study this summer the matter of the preservation of wild life, and the summer months will be consumed by this committee in its studies—how to preserve bird life; how to preserve the lives of migratory waterfowl from the ruthless slaughter in progress now.

A sentiment is rapidly developing which will lend itself in a short time to the taking over by the National Government of the great area of swamp lands in southern Florida in order to preserve the abundant bird life which exists there now. We have already established along our rivers some national preserves and we expect to establish still more game preserves in the immediate future.

Organizations, such as the Educational Conservation Society, are engaged in promoting propositions of this character.

At the present time songbirds are rapidly disappearing. Not many years ago there were always a song somewhere; there came always the song of the lark when the skies were clear; and then, when the skies were gray, there was always the song of the thrush. Not long ago the bluebird sang its song from orchard trees and whether the skies were dark or were clear there always came, just a few years ago, from orchards and from the forests and along the hedgerows the love songs of wild birds. These conditions we know are rapidly disappearing.

In some sections of the southern part of the United States robins are killed as game birds. They do not sing in the South; but when they come back to our colder North, they sing their love songs. But there is a perceptible diminution in this form of bird wild life in the course of the last 20 years.

The great destruction of wild life, of forests, and of oil has all occurred within the last 40 years and is proceeding more rapidly now than ever. The depletion of our mineral resources must be stopped. We need more land laws to preserve our remaining public domain from the waste and the looting of private interests.

We have started in now to develop water power by Government agencies at Muscle Shoals and at Boulder Dam, and these are features of the broader national program for the conservation of natural resources.

We are controlling forest fires better now than we did 30 years ago, but there is much along these lines to be done. There is still a tremendous waste through soil erosion. Our armies of unemployed in the last 12 months have been engaged in stopping some of it, and their work will be educational and will inspire men to preserve against erosion the farms which are now in cultivation.

We must preserve for future generations all those things adapted to the physical well-being and the comfort and the happiness of the people who will live on this earth and within the boundaries of the continental United States long after we are gone.

AMATEUR BOXING

Mrs. NORTON presented the following conference report on the bill (S. 828) to authorize boxing in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which was ordered printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—UNITED STATES GEOGRAPHIC BOARD

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress:

Pursuant to the provisions of section 16 of the act of March 3, 1933 (ch. 212, 47 Stat. 1517), as amended by title III of the act of March 20, 1933 (ch. 3, 48 Stat. 16), I am transmitting herewith an Executive order abolishing the United States Geographic Board and transferring its functions to the Department of the Interior.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 17, 1934.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read and ordered spread upon the Journal:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H.R. 8046, entitled "An act to provide a penalty for the knowing or willful presentation of any false written instrument relating to any matter within the jurisdiction of any department or agency of the Government with intent to defraud the United States."

This bill, in effect, seeks to punish every person who, with intent to defraud the United States, knowingly or willfully makes, aids, or assists in the making of any false representation concerning any matter within the jurisdiction of any agency of the United States, or any corporation owned or controlled by the United States. The maximum penalty prescribed by the bill is a fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years, or both.

These offenses are already covered by existing law, which provides for more severe punishment than that proposed by the bill. Section 35 of the Criminal Code, as amended by the act of October 23, 1918 (U.S.C., title 18, sec. 80), in addition to covering certain other offenses, provides for the punishment of all persons who, for the purpose and with the intent of cheating and swindling or defrauding the Government of the United States, or any department thereof, or any corporation in which the United States is a stockholder, knowingly and willfully falsify, or conceal or cover up, a material fact, or make or cause to be made any false or fraudulent statement or representation. The penalty prescribed by the foregoing section is a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both, to wit, double the penalty prescribed in the bill under consideration.

The bill is objectionable in that its result would be to reduce the punishment for certain frauds against the United States.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 17, 1934.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message of the President and the bill be referred to the Judiciary Committee and ordered printed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1935

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 9061), making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H.R. 9061, the District of Columbia appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1935, with Mr. SEARS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity merely to make a few brief observations and possibly an analysis of the testimony in the investigation of Dr. Wirt; and I want to emphasize to my Democratic friends that Dr. Wirt is not our baby. [Laughter.] Not only do I want to emphasize to my Democratic friends that he is not our baby, but that we have no relation whatever to him; they cannot prove any evidence of paternity on the part of the Republican Party. [Applause.] We have never sponsored him and we do not propose to let the Democrats place him upon our doorstep. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. BYRNS. Is the gentleman making this statement as an apology for the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN]?

Mr. FISH. No; the gentleman from Kansas can speak for himself; he generally does; and he knows how to speak for himself very ably.

I am making this statement not only for the education of the Democratic Party but for accuracy of statements in the press.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I am sorry but I cannot yield. I must catch a 4:05 train.

That is exactly why I rose to speak, because what the Democrats are trying to do is perfectly obvious; they are trying to make this so-called "doctor" from Indiana a Republican agent, a Republican propagandist. [Laughter.] Now let us get down to the facts.

As Al Smith said, "Let us look at the record." Let us see what the record proves.

In the first place, the testimony that was submitted on behalf of Dr. Wirt was introduced before a committee of this House by the head of the committee on the Nation, a committee that has for its object the depreciation of the currency, certainly not a Republican principle, an organization that had backed the President 100 percent up to that time. Dr. Wirt, if he was spokesman for anyone, was the spokesman for that committee, and it was the president of this committee who had been supporting the President all the way through that read his testimony into the RECORD. When the charge was read into the RECORD a Democratic member of the committee, not a Republican, introduced a resolution to have him investigated, and the House, controlled by the Democrats, appointed a committee to investigate, and naturally they put in charge members of their own party.

Facts are facts, and they are very stubborn things. I knew very well when I started to speak that you Democrats would like to wish Dr. Wirt on us as one of our main propagandists, when, as a matter of fact, he was spokesman for a committee that was back of the administration and trying to depreciate the currency. Even the testimony of the witnesses given before the committee today states that Dr. Wirt took up all of the time at the dinner talking about depreciating the currency. I want to be fair, and I believe this should be nonpartisan. It is evidently hard to make it nonpartisan. I heard the testimony the first day, and, as far as I am concerned, I did not hear any testimony from Dr. Wirt about his so-called "dinner with a nest of radicals" that would hold any weight in court. He just recited what he thought he heard in talking to a bunch of radicals. One was a Communist. Another was a Socialist. They were all subordinates. What did it amount to?

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will yield to me, I will yield him a half minute.

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. This is the first time I ever saw the gentleman from New York afraid to yield.

Mr. FISH. I will answer any question of the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield the gentleman a half minute to answer the question.

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. If Dr. Wirt is not the gentleman's baby, then why is he and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN] acting as wet nurses for him? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FISH. That is a fair question in some respects. I have never met Dr. Wirt. I have never spoken on this floor about Dr. Wirt, and I know nothing whatever about him. As far as that dinner is concerned, I do not think his testimony amounts to anything. If the gentleman refers to other Members of the House, perhaps he has a right to, but as far as I am concerned the gentleman never heard me mention Dr. Wirt in this House.

First I want to say that I do not think the testimony Dr. Wirt presented about the dinner conversation amounted to anything, and, second, Dr. Wirt has no connection whatever with the Republican Party. As I said before, he is not our baby, and even the gentleman from Texas is not going to bring him along and put him on our doorstep. As far as his trying to prove that we were in the midst of an economic and social revolution, the only thing he was trying to prove was about the easiest thing to prove to anyone's satisfaction. There are any number of Members of this House that can prove it. The only way to prove it is by the testimony of the members of the "brain trust" themselves.

Look at the books they have written. Look at their speeches. Look at their other acts. I am just a pacifist on this question. I am mild compared with some Members of the House on the Democratic side. I have heard Democratic Members get up and denounce the A.A.A. and call the members of the A.A.A. Communists and all kinds of things. I do not agree with their sentiments, because lots of times I think people confuse socialism with communism. I do not know of any Communist in this administration, but I know of a great many Socialists. I know a number of Socialist-minded men, and I know these men, holding key positions in this administration, are out of sympathy with our economic and political system. They are disbelievers in our present system and they want to bring about a social and economic revolution. That is exactly what they are trying to do, and they are largely succeeding at the present time. There are a number of Democrats here that know that. There are a number of Democrats, a majority in this House, who are not in sympathy with that idea, and are not in sympathy with the "brain trust", and are not in sympathy with their socialistic ideas.

This is what Dr. Wirt was trying to prove, but he knows less about it than do half the Members of the House who live here in Washington. We know these people and we see what they are doing every day. Dr. Wirt merely comes here occasionally from the State of Indiana and attends a little dinner.

I heard only the first day's testimony, but there are only two remarks that should be investigated, because they did seriously challenge the Government and challenged two high officials in the Government service. One was Frederic Howe. Dr. Wirt testified that General Westervelt had said that Frederic Howe had come to him and said, in effect, "We won't be able to give any more money to the unemployed and hungry so we can accomplish our results sooner." Dr. Tugwell said, "We ought to take the young students and put them together and educate them along these radical ideas so we can use them." These men, General Westervelt, Dr. Tugwell, and Dr. Howe, should be called before the committee instead of calling a few of these subordinates who do not amount to anything and which results in nothing. Those were serious charges, and they are the only charges that have not been investigated. The only thing that Dr. Wirt said that was worth while at all has been utterly ignored. Everybody knows that and everybody knows, if they want to take the trouble to investigate the record of either Dr. Howe or Dr. Tugwell, that both of them have been associated for years with socialistic organizations; not 1 but 3 or 4 of them. I can name every one of these organizations. You can go into the records and find what they themselves have stated. You do not have to have a man come down here from Indiana to tell us what public statements these men made or what they said in their writings. We can fill books with the socialistic statements of Dr. Howe and Dr. Tugwell.

We can show exactly what they are trying to do, and I do not believe they would deny it. They are trying to destroy the profit system, and the profit system is nothing but the American industrial system, that whether you are a laborer, a farmer, or whatnot, you are entitled to make a reasonable profit. Their whole idea and the whole idea of every organization they belong to is to destroy this profit system.

The only reason I rose to speak today, and I admit I had some ulterior motives, is that I hoped I would have time to discuss the air mail and some other little problems before us, but, unfortunately for you and for me, I have not the time to do this. I do want to say, however, although I think I have made it perfectly clear in spite of the gentleman from Texas, this is the first time I have spoken on Dr. Wirt or his testimony or what he is trying to do; but his objective, which is perfectly clear, is to call the attention of the people back home to the fact that we are in the midst of a social and economic revolution, and the only testimony he produced is that of General Westervelt.

So I challenge the committee, before they conclude their hearings, to call General Westervelt before them and ask him whether it is the truth that he made these two statements, and then call Dr. Tugwell and Dr. Howe and ask them if they belong to these socialistic organizations, and ask them if these statements printed under their names are the truth—whether they desire to destroy the profit system. This will end the whole thing, and if they deny it or if they deny their own work, then, again, that is the end of the whole proposition.

Mr. BLACK. What is the use of spending the money; we can take your word for it.

Mr. FISH. I think you are right, and you can take their word for it, too, because it is printed in black and white, and there is no use spending any more money.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the gentleman say he wanted to catch the 4:05 New York train for that most important banquet tonight?

Mr. FISH. Yes; and the gentleman took a minute out of my time. In conclusion, I challenge the Democratic members of the committee, if they want to do the honest thing and the right thing, to call these two gentlemen and ask for their own testimony to find out whether they are Socialists or not. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARKER] such time as he may desire to use.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to announce in the time I have the death of a constituent, Mrs. Belle Rhynes, of Savannah, Ga., who died last Sunday.

In my opinion, Mrs. Rhynes was the oldest citizen in the United States. She had reached the age of 123 years on last March 4, and I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks a short newspaper account of her death, telling some of the incidents in her life.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CALDWELL). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

123-YEAR-OLD WOMAN DIES AT HOME IN SAVANNAH

SAVANNAH, GA., April 15.—Mrs. Belle Rhynes, 123-year-old Irishwoman, who attributed her long life to pipe smoking and a philosophic outlook, died today at the Little Sisters of the Poor Home.

She was born in Dublin, March 4, 1811, and came to America with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Heights, when 11 years old. In early life she joined a circus with her husband, now many years dead, and performed as a snake charmer and dancer.

It was a matter of pride and principle with Mrs. Rhynes that she always took the things of life as they came. She had smoked a pipe for 112 years, she said, and it was to this, coupled with her philosophical outlook on life, that she laid her longevity.

On her one hundred and twenty-first birthday, when feebleness began to manifest itself strongly, Mrs. Rhynes said: "I'm as happy as a little pig in the sunshine, and they talk about me being old. Why, Uncle John Shell was 130, and he started out to get some wood to cook with when he fell dead in the yard." Shell was a one-time neighbor.

She was confirmed by the Most Rev. Michael J. Keyes, Catholic bishop of Savannah, on her one hundred and twentieth birthday, and on that occasion received quantities of presents from her friends—including a pipe, rosaries, flowers, tobacco, candy, and bedroom slippers were given her that time.

Last year Mrs. Rhynes took a marked interest in the political situation when Franklin D. Roosevelt was inaugurated President on her birthday. She had just recovered from an illness when she learned of the inauguration, and breakfasted in bed, topping things off by smoking her pipe. She never tried cigarettes. She said she had asthma for 101 years, but had been cured of that.

Tomorrow at 9 a.m. she will be buried in the Catholic cemetery. She has one living relative in America, a great-grandson, Joe McBee, of Louisville, Ky.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I want to take 5 minutes of your time to devote to this so-called "Wirt or Squirt investigation." The gentleman from New York today has disclaimed any ownership of this baby that he claims we are trying to lay on your doorstep. I call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that the gentleman who first read into the RECORD the reported statements of Dr. Wirt and demanded here an investigation is the gentleman from the western State of Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN] who charged here that we were formulating a Communist plot for the overthrow of our Government.

I have attended every meeting of the special committee and I have seen the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN] as he has attempted to prove Dr. Wirt a national hero and attempted to uncover some sort of sinister rebellion, and as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has confessed today, the whole thing is a flop, and now that it has flopped they want to bring Wirt back over here and put him on our doorstep. Well, we do not want him. He is the child of the gentleman from Kansas. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman, Dr. Wirt, at the first hearing expressed great reluctance about all this publicity he was given. He was anxious to get back to Indiana. We asked him if he would be available at the next hearing and he stayed over until the next day. He has since been in Washington although he was paid off by the Sergeant at Arms some $90, which was at the rate of over $1 a minute, and which some people thought was excessive compensation. However, he is still in Washington, available to any newspapermen or any photographers although the committee has said that they are through and have no need for any more of his testimony, but with the $90 in his pocket, payment at the rate of $1 a minute, he is just itching for another chance to expound his obsessions before the committee.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. The gentleman's remarks are quite true.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. If it is a short one; yes.

Mr. MILLARD. Does the gentleman recall that before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, when Mr. Rand offered this testimony, JOHN COOPER, a Republican, objected, but Mr. BULWINKLE wanted it to go in the RECORD?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I do not recall that, because I was not present; but I will say that I was present when you got your finished product up here. When your delivery doctor, Mr. MCGUGIN, announced the probable arrival of this baby, Dr. Wirt, your side of the House cheered gleefully, or so it is recorded in the RECORD; but now that the baby turns out to have the scurvy and apparently not capable of making much political ballyhoo, you now bring in Dr. FISH and try to prove that the child is not yours. Well, if he is not yours, why has the gentleman from Kansas taken so much time to defend him? Why has he launched such bitter attacks on the "brain trust" under the guise of speaking on the Wirt investigation?

When Dr. Wirt was called into the room, I was present. I heard every word he said. I heard two Republican members of the committee attempt to make the audience believe that he was deprived of the opportunity of counsel.

Whoever heard of a witness in a courtroom having an attorney to tell him what to say, and yet the Republican members tried to make the audience believe that; and this morning they brought in a gallery or a group to applaud Mr. MCGUGIN in every remark that he made.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the gentleman realize that the newspapermen made an investigation of this gallery, or claque, that applauded Dr. Wirt and his counsel, Mr. McGugin, and they found that they were Republican officeholders who had been discharged since the Democrats took over the administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I will say that if this gallery was constituted of Republican ex-officeholders, I am sorry that there were not more of them there. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. Who pays them?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I have no doubt their pay will come from some source that otherwise might have been turned to the Republican Party.

Now, there has been a lot said about the "brain trust." It would have been a good thing in this country if there had been brains in the Government before this administration got in. [Applause.]

You had the trust all right, no question about that; but this is the first illustration of brains in government.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman realizes that there are a great many people in this country who know that this is a controversy between the Steel Trust and the "brain trust."

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. No question about that. Why, the man they send in to proclaim the "brain trust" plot was for the steel industry. If this is a contest between the "brain trusters" and the "steel trusters", I am for the "brain trusters" every time. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. How does the gentleman spell that word "steel"?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. You can spell it either way, and it works just the same. In this country they have been stealing what should have gone to the masses of the people, until today millions, except for the Government, would be starving.

Now, as to Dr. Wirt, I ask which one of you would be guilty of going to a private home, accepting the hospitality of the owner, enunciating your own doctrine, and then deliberately lie to serve your masters back home? Dr. Wirt accepted the hospitality of this lady, took dinner there, monopolized the conversation, and then attempts to use the occasion for political propaganda purposes solely to bring in the political philosophy of a member of the "brain trust." He has written several booklets on the subject and otherwise commercialized the friendship and hospitality of his friends. To what depths of depravity has this man sunk that he will exploit his friend of 20 years for publicity for himself and to make ammunition for the interests that he seeks to serve? What section of our people has been harmed by the "brain trust"? Farm prices are up, labor gets better wages and shorter hours, retail business is better, the hungry are fed, millions have been given jobs. What is it about the "brain trust" to which the gentlemen object?

There is one clash here—and there is only one clash—and that is between the old order of merciless exploitation of the many to fatten the few and the new order which believes that prosperity belongs to all of the people. I heard Dr. Wirt say, when they put the question to him, "What is it that the brain-trusters seem to want?" He said, "They kept talking about a richer life." Gentlemen, if you go back home you will find that the people of this country want a part of that richer life. I do not see anything wrong in that. This morning I heard the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] ask further, What is it you would do? The lady on the stand said, "I think I would give some of the benefits of life to the rest of the people in this country." Is there anything wrong with that? You cry out for the old order. What part of it do you want? They just want you to pass around some of these benefits to the people who are hungry. It means taking the huge dividends and letting the people have a break on them. It means that labor must live and that the consumers must be considered. You talk about regimentation. I heard them cry regimentation and planned economy, and for 50 years you have had regimentation, but you have regimented the people of this country for a few big industries. The steel trust has had everything regimented for it. Your big industries have had things regimented for them, but when you start giving some of the benefits to the people of this country, you bring in Mr. FISH, with his report on communism and cry out that this thing is radical.

I do not think we ought to have waited for the gentleman from New York to come and defend the administration or for him to make the statement that the "brain trusters" are not communistic. If it is communism to give the people a break, then I am for communism; and if it is socialism to give them a break, I am for that. If it is "brain trusting" to call for a social order that gives a break to classes that have been robbed for years, I am for that; and I am not going to be scared off by their dragging Dr. Wirt across the path and saying that we are plotting revolution.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] said that there were a great many Democrats and a great many people in the administration who are out of sympathy with the economic order that we have. I want to be put down as one out of sympathy with any economic order which has starved millions for the last 8 or 10 years.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I think that is generally the spirit. The people back home are not going to be misled by a red herring being dragged across the path, and I am glad to say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] recognizes today that the Wirt episode is a bust and refuses to accept responsibility for it. [Applause.]

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN] such time as he desires.

Mr. MCGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, I was very much amused at the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] in which he brings the Steel Trust into this debate and in which he implies that the Steel Trust is not satisfied with the present order as of this day. According to a recent report of the Federal Trade Commission—a commission of this administration—the Steel Trust under the N.R.A. is able to enjoy privileges which were denied to the Steel Trust under former administrations and the benefits that the Steel Trust is now obtaining under the N.R.A. will annually cost the agricultural sections of the country $50,000,000 or $60,000,000, which benefits have been denied to the Steel Trust by the previous administrations. In other words, the N.R.A., under the manner in which it is now being administered, is permitting the Steel Trust to do that which it was barred from doing prior to the enactment of the N.R.A. and the suspension of monopoly laws. So much for the Steel Trust. My objection is not to the N.R.A. as a law but the manner in which it is being administered.

Let us come now to the so-called "Wirt hearing" and let us take the history of it from its beginning. We have been holding a hearing under a resolution introduced by a Democratic Member from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE], under a resolution presented to this House by a Democratic-controlled Rules Committee and passed by this House, nearly three fourths of the Membership of which are Democrats. That is the hearing which we have been holding, sired and sponsored by the Democratic membership of the House—not by the Republican membership, not by me, but by the Democratic membership. It is your hearing, it is your resolution, your Member was the author of it, and your membership passed it in this House.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] a few moments ago referred to me as the wet nurse for Dr. Wirt. Very well. Let us call the roll on that. As a member of the committee, the first time I ever saw Dr. Wirt was when he appeared before the committee. I never saw Dr. Wirt again until he appeared before the committee today. Every word that I have ever uttered to Dr. Wirt I uttered to him as a member of that committee in open session.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCGUGIN. No. I do not yield. Here is what I have done. I have tried, as best I could, to stand on this floor and obtain common, simple justice for Dr. Wirt, and I will do the same thing for the most lowly citizen of the country. I have said that the committee has not played the game fairly with Dr. Wirt, because in the first place it denied to him the right to make an opening statement, and when it denied to Dr. Wirt the right to make an opening statement it denied to him a right which had been enjoyed by the hundreds and thousands of other witnesses who have appeared before congressional committees, both House and Senate.

On this floor a few days ago the chairman of this committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE], made the bold statement that Dr. Wirt had served time in jail at Gary, Ind., for his pro-German activities during the war.

A few moments thereafter, at the request of Hon. James A Reed, I took the floor for 1 minute to make the statement that the charge that Dr. Wirt had been in jail for disloyalty was false and that his record was clean. I did not do that because I was a wet nurse for Dr. Wirt; I did it in common justice to a citizen of this country. When I did it the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], Democratic leader, rose in his place and charged me with playing petty politics. Since when is it petty politics to stand upon the floor of the House of Representatives and make the humble suggestion that a statement that a man has been in jail for disloyalty is false when, indeed, it is false? I was not then playing the role of a wet nurse for Dr. Wirt; I was extending only common decency and common justice to a fellow citizen of my country; yes, the common justice that I would extend to a dog.

Let us go a little further. Throughout this entire proceeding we have been confronted with a reign of terror and abuse upon anyone who would rise to criticize. Not only did the chairman of the committee stand upon this floor and charge that Dr. Wirt had been in jail for disloyalty but he remained silent for 5 full days and never retracted his statement until every newspaper in this country had carried the correction and proved the falsity of that statement. Not alone that, but Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes called a press conference, and it was reported in the press that Dr. Wirt had taken his present position because the Public Works Administrator, Mr. Ickes, had forbidden Wirt to reach into the sacred Public Works fund, for his own personal interest.

In answer to that, Dr. Wirt denied the statement, and no one has offered a scintilla of evidence that Dr. Wirt ever tried to despoil the Public Works funds for his own personal interest as the Secretary of the Interior said he did in the statement which he gave to the press.

Not alone that, yesterday the ranking member of this committee stood upon this floor and charged me with violating the rules of this House, charged me with practicing deceit and deception upon this House, and never retracted it until the documentary evidence was forced upon him and until the Speaker of the House had declared that I had obtained the right to insert my speech of last Friday.

Whatever may be said of the Dr. Wirt hearing, it has brought about another issue now, and that issue is: Can an American citizen—any American citizen—be subpenaed before a congressional committee and be compelled to give testimony under oath without his fair name being vilified and slandered on the floor of the House by the chairman of that committee; whether he can be subpenaed here without his good name being vilified and slandered, and falsely so, by a Cabinet officer of this Government?

It is now quite apparent that he who rises to criticize must face the ordeal of having his fair name defamed. Not alone Wirt; what about Lindbergh; what about Rickenbacker? What crime has either of them committed except that they rose to criticize? This is one of the issues that is now before the American people, and if this country of ours is to be a land of the free, it must be a land where a citizen can come before a congressional committee and testify without his name and character being vilified on the floor of the House or by Cabinet officers.

They did not even wait until Dr. Wirt appeared before the congressional committee to start vilifying his name. It was reported in the press that the Speaker of the House said that if Dr. Wirt did not testify he would be placed in jail. That statement was heralded to the country before he testified. What occasion was there for that statement? Dr. Wirt had not said he would not testify. That statement could serve but one purpose only, namely, to intimidate the witness before he appeared, and to discredit him before the country before he gave his testimony.

No matter what may come of the Wirt proceedings, it has disclosed that Frederick Howe, the man who is consumers' counsel in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, is the same Frederick Howe who was commissioner of immigration at Ellis Island in 1919, the same Frederick Howe, of whom a great Representative, a great liberal, a great patriot, Mr. LaGuardia, now mayor of New York City, in substance, upon the floor of the House, said the following:

Mr. Howe has a right to believe in a law or not, as he sees fit; but as a public official he has no right to ignore it. As Commissioner of Immigration at Ellis Island it is his duty to deport anarchists, but instead of deporting them he is acting as their counsel.

This was the statement of Mr. LaGuardia, made upon the floor of this House. Thereafter Mr. Howe resigned. Yet that man is back in the Government service in this administration, after he had betrayed his duty in the Wilson administration.

Come what may from the Wirt investigation, this much more has been disclosed: That one Mr. Robert Bruere is now at the head of the cotton textile code, and within his clutches is the cotton industry of this country. He holds his appointment under this administration. This same man in 1919 and 1922 was writing articles for a pamphlet issued by the Civil Liberties Union, which pamphlet was in defense of the I.W.W.'s; and in his articles he severely criticized the Department of Justice under the Wilson administration for the conduct of that Department toward the I.W.W.'s during the war. Yet today that same man, that same defender of the I.W.W.'s, that same critic of the Department of Justice under the Wilson administration, holds within his hand the destiny of the cotton industry of this country.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUGIN. No.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I merely wish to say the gentleman is not correct in that statement; that was not the testimony.

Mr. McGUGIN. I have no objection to this administration's throwing Republicans out of office and placing Democrats in office, if indeed they be Democrats. I am opposed to men being thrown out of office and being replaced by men whose political philosophy is communistic and who are as far from the Democratic platform in principle as the East is from the West. Let me say that no party had a more patriotic platform, no party ever offered a better platform from the standpoint of patriotism than did the Democratic Party in 1932. [Applause.] But what do we find? An administration elected to office on that platform has appointed men to office whose philosophy of government is contrary to that platform and whose philosophy of government is in keeping with the socialistic platform. Call the roll of Rexford Tugwell, Jerome Frank, Frederic Howe, and more of them, and it would be in perfect keeping that they were in executive positions if Mr. Thomas had been elected President, but it is not in perfect keeping for any administration that was elected upon the platform of the Democratic Party of 1932. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, since the gentleman from Kansas refers again to the statement that I made on the floor last week, it might not be inappropriate for me to say that a Member of Congress, and a very reliable Member, brought a lawyer to me from Indiana who made the statement to me as a report that during the war Dr. Wirt, on account of pro-German activities, was imprisoned at Gary, Ind.; that his friends claimed he was in there for protection from a mob. I should have said this the other day, and I corrected what I said in the RECORD, by the words "whether or not that charge was true." There are quite a few charges and reports about Dr. Wirt as to which I could say "whether or not those charges were true", but again I say that we were not trying to persecute Dr. Wirt. I cared little about him.

I started this investigation with absolute honesty to see whether there were any who had made these remarks that Dr. Wirt said had been made in the Rand evidence given to the committee. The committee went into this very carefully, and I tell you it was pitiful to see, on the one hand, Dr. Wirt, and again it was pitiful to see the strain that the gentleman from Kansas was under in trying to make a mountain out of a molehill.

I do not like to talk about Dr. Wirt. I do not know whether the man has wheels in his head or wiggletails in his think tank, but I do know that here was a man who reported to the country that six people holding minor, subordinate positions in the Federal Government, and under oath gave their names, were the people who were going to destroy the Government. God pity the soul of a man who has not the manhood now, after all that has come out, to stand up and say, "I was mistaken in what I said."

I might have gone into this further. Here was a man who held this secret in his bosom and let no one know about it from the 1st of September until the 17th of March, and then he sprung it on an unsuspecting people. He could remember every word that the lady said, who had not read Dr. Tugwell's books and who had not even read any of his writings, yet for 3 hours she rehearsed it to him. Pitiful? Yes; it is. I am especially sorry that any American citizen would so attempt to detract from the character of these people serving the Government down here.

But the gentleman from Kansas needed a political issue and he needed something to make a showing in reference to this regimentation that was going on. By the way, Robert LeBruere has not control of the textile code at all. There was no evidence of that. He is in that division.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Reference was made to Lawrence Todd, who represents in the Soviet Republic what corresponds to the Associated Press, an inoffensive, meek, mild, likeable individual. Everybody loves Lawrence Todd who knows him. He was one of these "dangerous characters." He and two women were going to overthrow the Government because of their influence on the President. The gentleman from Kansas would have carried that on and on and on if he had had a chance, but now he is sore because his issue has gone up in smoke. So now he comes back to regimentation. Suppose we do have some regimentation now in order to get back to prosperity. As we heard not so long ago, during the entire time of the Hoover administration we had regimentation of unemployment lines seeking bread. It was just that. We had regimentation when this bonus army came to Washington. But, thank God, we are going to have a different kind of regimentation in this country now.

I do not like to go into what the committee is going to report. I do not know. I think and I feel that it has been absolutely improper for any Member of this House on a committee, before the committee hands down a decision and makes its report, to take the floor of the House and talk about it. Yet these things cannot be helped sometimes when you have a gentleman who is so politically minded and would like to find something down here in the Government that he could get hold of to bolster up his ideas. He cannot find a thing.

I do not care to talk about this any more.

All that happened was that six people went to a dinner and took a guest with them. For 5 hours he—Dr. Wirt—talked about the devaluation of currency or some such thing as that and let no one have a word edgewise in the entire evening. They all went away saying that they were absolutely bored to death with Dr. Wirt's talk, and Dr. Wirt's talk reminds me a great deal of the gentleman from Kansas. Both will bore you if you listen to them long enough.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, as a member of this special committee of the House to inquire into the charges made by Dr. Wirt, which committee has been subjected to some abuse, not from the lovely old doctor from Indiana but from at least one of my Republican colleagues on that committee, I want to say that in the beginning I was not so enthusiastic that this House should dignify this school teacher by having a hearing at which he might appear and air his views. The demand, as we interpreted it, from the public, however, became so great that the leadership of the House felt we ought to inquire into these charges, and, unfortunately for me, I was appointed a member of that special committee. Since then I have done my utmost to investigate the charges made by this scholastic gentleman from Indiana.

Somebody has said it is a close race as to whether Indiana will become famous by reason of Dr. Wirt or by reason of John Dillinger. [Laughter.]

I now have the impression that this committee will not have to report to the House, because, due to the explosive industry of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN], all that has happened or might have happened before the committee has already been reported in great detail to the House. While the action of the gentleman from Kansas may have violated the proprieties of the House, it has at least saved us a lot of trouble in sitting down and writing out a report of the extraordinarily boring hearings.

My Republican colleague from Coffeyville, Kans., comes from that great State which has been heretofore famous for its cyclones, its cattle tick, its grasshoppers, the matchless, sockless Jerry Simpson, the rampant Carrie Nation, and the vigilant Mary Ellen Lease. Now its power has been broadcast to the world by one HAROLD MCGUGIN, Representative in Congress from Cherokee County, who has taken this hearing more seriously than even Dr. Wirt himself. It is an even race as to who is the "persecuted victim" of this "un-American proceeding" in the protests of the gentleman from Kansas. If it is not Dr. Wirt it must be Mr. MCGUGIN. In his autobiography in the Congressional Directory, the gentleman from Kansas emphasizes the fact that he is a member of the Inns of Court, London. This boast comes as a great surprise to me. When the O'Connors were kings of Ireland and most of the then known world, the McGugins or O'Googans were loyal subjects in the south of Ireland. How a McGugin or an O'Googan could so long forget the national antipathy of the Irish to British oppression to join the Inns of Court in London, of all places, is beyond my comprehension.

I heard the gentleman from Kansas speak about the great prosperity of the Steel Trust in the recent months under our administration. This may be true. I do not know. I pay little attention to the financial reports of this trust or any other trust, but I do know that for the first time in 70 years an administration of our Government has seen to it that that monopoly and that octopus must pay a living wage to its employees. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Kansas mentioned today that the distinguished counsel for Dr. Wirt, ex-Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri, appeared before our committee and demanded that Dr. Wirt be permitted to first make an opening statement and to then submit himself to examination. The distinguished ex-Member of the Senate from Missouri and the member of the committee from Kansas delivered several orations in which they said such a method of procedure was usual and the undeviated-from method of conducting such legislative inquiries. When the majority of the committee voted down the proposition that this Indiana scholar make first an oration before our committee, such as he had made for at least 4 hours out there in Virginia, there was a violent protest from ex-Senator Reed, the gentleman from Kansas, and a mild protest from the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], and again today there was a great protest at the hearing.

Very seldom am I industrious; but yesterday afternoon I went over to the Senate library, and I dug out the hearings of a Senate committee, conducted in 1926, inquiring into the elections of certain Senators. One case was the election in Illinois where one Frank L. Smith claimed to have been elected. Another case was in Pennsylvania, where our ex-colleague, the Honorable William S. Vare, claimed to have been elected. This committee was presided over by the same distinguished gentleman, ex-Senator Reed, of Missouri; and today may I quote Senator Reed from many pages of that testimony where he denied any witnesses, whether they were Senators or whether they were Members of the House of Representatives, the right to make any opening statement before his own committee. You all remember a distinguished man who sat on the Republican side of the House, Mr. Allen Moore, of Chicago. Allen Moore came before Senator Reed's committee as a witness, as did also the Honorable Frank L. Smith. Both of these distinguished gentlemen desired to make a statement before Senator Reed's committee before they were submitted to examination, and the same ex-Senator, James A. Reed, presiding as chairman of that committee, said, "Why nothing like that was ever heard of in the history of investigating committees." [Laughter and applause.] Mr. Chairman, it all depends on which side of the table you are sitting.

Now, the excited gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN] has again referred today to the remarks that I made on the floor of this House yesterday to the effect that the gentleman had violated the rules of the House by extending his remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD without first obtaining the permission of the House. As you all know, I withdrew my remarks from the RECORD, so there is nothing now in the RECORD or before the House about which the gentleman should properly speak; but, as I said to the House yesterday, I still maintain that we are in a quandary in this House if we cannot rely upon the printed CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in which there was not one word giving the gentleman from Kansas any permission to extend his remarks, but, finally, the reporters found page 200, which had been "dropped on the steps" between the House and the reporters' room. Well, the gentleman from Kansas may take what comfort out of that unusual explanation he sees fit. I do not feel the least bit guilty about what I said, because I had the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD before me, and every morning when I read that RECORD I feel I am entitled to rely upon it and proceed in accordance with it. This is the first occasion of which I know when that RECORD was not correct in such a particular.

The gentleman from Kansas has made a vicious attack upon our distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]. He has also made an attack upon our most distinguished Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois, whom we all love [Mr. RAINEY]. He has stated that our Speaker said if Dr. Wirt came here and refused to testify, he would go to jail. Well, that is the law. If any witness, before any of our committees, refuses to testify, we can send the witness to jail. Why should we not do so? That is the only way a legislative body can deal with a recalcitrant witness. Mr. Chairman, there were intimations in the newspapers that Dr. Wirt would stubbornly refuse to testify. When we went into that hearing on the 10th of this month, we, the majority of the committee, were given to understand that Dr. Wirt would not testify, by naming the "revolutionists" who talked to him; and he, in effect corroborated that press comment, because he was only half through his testimony when he said, in effect, "Now, gentlemen, I refuse to state any more", and thereupon he sat down. That action on the part of the doctor would not have annoyed the committee in itself, because by that time the doctor, by reason of his irresponsible monologue, had bored the press, the public in attendance; but more obviously his own counsel, ex-Senator Reed. But the committee had a duty to perform, to ascertain the truth or falsity of the doctor's charges; so with great patience we proceeded.

All you ladies and gentlemen undoubtedly read in the newspapers that Dr. Wirt had told the press before the hearing that he had carefully locked up in his office in Gary, Ind., the home of the United States Steel Trust, the names of the people to whom he had talked in Washington and who had disclosed to him this "revolution." That was stated and reiterated by Dr. Wirt; and the testimony before our committee today was especially to the effect that only the day before the hearing, to wit, on the Monday before the Tuesday of the hearing, April 10, Dr. Wirt's wife walked up back-alleys and side streets, stating that she feared she was being followed—by whom she did not say—and then went to Miss Barrows, the lady who gave the dinner in Virginia, and asked her to give the names of those to whom the doctor had talked at Miss Barrows' home. It was therefore not until the day before the hearing that Dr. Wirt even had the names of the people who, he claimed, had divulged to him the secrets of this great "revolution", this great "overthrow" of the Government. Of course, the scholastic doctor took all that back and frankly stated that by "revolution", a word he had deliberately used to arouse the country, he did not mean a revolution to overthrow the Government by force of arms. He stated he meant only a revolution to overthrow the existing social order. No greater anticlimax was ever confessed.

The only two projects the doctor mentioned as tending to overthrow the existing social order were the housing program and the homestead program. How terrible! Those innovations are so repulsive to his Republican standpatism as to what should be the course of our national social order, after his tutelage of 25 years under the Steel Trust in Gary, that he could not possibly endure it. It became an obsession with him. One look at him would convince anyone that he was psychopathic.

The steel company's doctor admitted that there is not going to be any revolution of arms. The "revolutionists" are not going to seize the Capitol. They are not going to assassinate our President. They are rather planning at dinners in the Old Dominion to overthrow "the existing social order", whatever that is. Imagine, they are advocating the terrible housing program to take our people out of the slums and give them a decent place in which to live. Imagine, these "revolutionists" advocate the establishment of homestead developments! They really want to take care of people in the rural sections! Reds? Why anyone who would advocate such proletariat projects surely must be "red", to Dr. Wirt's mind, at least.

Now, about Mr. Bruere. Of course, Mr. Bruere has absolutely nothing to do with the cotton industry, contrary to what the gentleman from Kansas said. Mr. Bruere is connected with the cotton-textile industry, which is very much different from the cotton industry of the South. But the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN] attempts to interpret, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BROWN] has well pointed out, the testimony of Mr. Bruere, which testimony will be found to be absolutely not subject to any such interpretation as placed upon it by the alarmed gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN].

Now, "flop" is a mild word to express the result of these hearings before our committee. I do not feel that I could possibly endure the ennui of another hearing. Enough is enough!

I am sure the newspapermen present in great numbers at the two hearings could not possibly endure another session. I am, moreover, positive that the audience would not attend. They have been bored to death, although that is immaterial.

Mr. Chairman, there is undoubtedly a great protest from certain big manufacturers, Wall Street brokers, and big business men of this country against what this administration proposes to do in the future as to legislation. I do not know whether the "Committee for the Nation" has supported the policies of this administration, as the gentleman from Kansas claims, but you will recall that this "pipe dream" of Dr. Wirt was first read by the chairman of the Committee for the Nation before a committee of our House—the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee—which committee was considering at that time the stock exchange bill. Dr. Wirt's statement was read in opposition to that bill and not in support of it, as the gentleman from Kansas would lead us to believe. I believe that every pending piece of legislation before us is now violently and vehemently opposed by this same Committee for the Nation, and that Dr. Wirt has been truly characterized at the hearings as an agent of that Committee for the Nation. That is "the nigger in the woodpile." That is why all this smoke cloud has been raised through the instrumentality of this old gentleman from Indiana, who, incidentally, came to my city of New York in 1914. At that time that distinguished gentleman, the late Mr. John Purroy Mitchel, was mayor of the city of New York. He invited Dr. Wirt to come there—of course, for very attractive pay; our committee paid him at the rate of over $1 per minute. Mayor Mitchel asked Dr. Wirt to install the Gary school system in the city of New York. That was a contract.

Of course, the people of New York City soon woke up to the fact that the Gary school system had as its sole objective not to train the student in "reading, writing, and arithmetic", but to train the child solely so that at the age of 12 or 14 he could take a tool in his or her hand and go into a factory and perform manual labor. The Steel Trust had worked it out beautifully in Gary under Dr. Wirt. That is the whole principle of the Gary system—train them for industry at the age of 14 or less, and not train them mentally. Well, Mr. Chairman, we had a municipal campaign in the city of New York in 1917. Mr. Mitchel ran for reelection. The Democratic Party nominated Mr. John F. Hylan for mayor—and, mark you, the sole issue in that campaign was the Gary school system advocated by the same Dr. Wirt upon the invitation of the then present mayor, the Honorable John Purroy Mitchel. The people of New York City then and there decided that the Gary school system could not be introduced into the city of New York. They wanted their children educated, not made the slaves of industry.

The people of the city of New York decided most emphatically that they were interested in educating their children for higher things rather than merely to use a tool and work in a factory conducted by big business at the age of 14. The people of the city of New York expressed their opinion of the Gary school system and of Dr. Wirt by electing Mr. Hylan by a plurality of 500,000. Whereupon Dr. Wirt retired to Gary and was taken off the pay roll of New York City.

Mr. Chairman, a lot of names have been mentioned here today by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN] as being members of the "brain trust", to wit, Mr. Tugwell, Mr. Wallace, Mr. Richberg, Mr. Frank, and some others. He and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] are trying desperately to make the country believe that these distinguished gentlemen are a menace to our Government and our Nation's progress. Well, these particular gentlemen may have ideas that may not be consonant with mine or yours. I care not for that. We can take care of that. We may have a Tugwell, we may have a Wallace, we may have a Howe, we may have a Richberg, we may have a Frank, and we may have "brain trusters", but, Mr. Chairman, thank God that this Democratic administration under Franklin D. Roosevelt has not got a Fall or a Daugherty or a Forbes or a Miller or a Postmaster General Brown. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, much false and misleading information, which is pure political propaganda in an effort to prejudice the people, has gone out concerning the independent offices appropriation bill recently passed by Congress.

Some Members of Congress have been charged with voting to override the President's veto in order to get an increase in salary. Others are being charged with voting to sustain the veto in order to get a salary increase.

The fact is all Federal employees, including Members of Congress, would have received a salary restoration, either way Congress voted. If Members voted to override the veto, they could be charged with voting for 10-percent restoration of salary; if they voted to sustain the President's veto, they could be charged with voting for a 15-percent increase.

I desire, therefore, to submit some cold facts from the record. The Economy Act, passed March 20, 1933, reduced all Federal salaries 15 percent, but the provisions relating to salaries expired automatically June 30, 1934. If the independent offices bill, continuing 5 percent of the pay cut, had failed to become a law, there would have been no legislation of that nature this session, and the full 15-percent salary reduction would have been restored July 1, 1934.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I may say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that in my mind there is no question in the world about the matter, that if we had not passed the independent offices appropriation bill there would have been a full restoration of all salaries on July 1, because any posted man here knows that there could not have possibly been legislation passed to have stopped it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the able gentleman from Texas for his straightforward statement. I especially appreciate it, coming from the gentleman who consistently fights for economy. It all amounts to this: A vote to override the veto was a vote for a salary reduction, despite charges to the contrary, and not a Member of this floor today, regardless of how he voted, will deny that statement.

Another thing. The President was not opposed to salary restoration, as some seem to think. On the other hand he asked for a flat 5-percent salary increase for Federal employees, with the power to make an additional increase up to 10 percent as living costs advanced. He objected to certain provisions of the bill affecting veterans because of wrong information given him.

Again, it has been erroneously stated the bill provided increased veterans' benefits costing $228,000,000. It has been found, however, that instead of restoring veterans to the amount of $228,000,000 that the total will be $76,712,500. But the amount in controversy was $20,000,000, regardless of the propaganda broadcast to the contrary.

The independent offices bill carried the following increases for veterans:

1. For disabled Spanish War veterans	$37,400,000
2. To restore veterans with service-connected disabilities to the schedules prior to passage of the Economy Act	30,000,000
3. To restore World War presumptively service-connected cases on a 75-percent basis	9,312,500
Total	76,712,500

By an Executive order the day the bill was vetoed, the President restored the presumptives to the rolls and also the Spanish War veterans, pending a new review of their cases by the Board of Appeals. He, however, did not propose to restore full compensation to the service-connected disabled. I do not think that, in view of the rising cost of living, that Congress can be severely criticized for restoring these battle casualties to the rates they were receiving prior to March 20, 1933.

The Veterans' Administration, a direct agency of the executive branch, estimates that the plan adopted by Congress will cost about $20,000,000 more than the one proposed by the President, and not $228,000,000 as charged by those who went off half-cocked before they knew the facts.

Another thing these big dailies "forgot" to tell the public is that the same bill continues salary cuts and other economies of the Economy Act which will save around $125,000,000 annually, which means that passage of this bill cuts around $105,000,000 off the expenses of the Government for the next fiscal year. It reduces the salary of every Member of this House $500 a year.

Yet, the charge is made brazenly and with a total disregard of the facts by a big daily newspaper in Oklahoma, and one or two of the smaller ones, that Members of Congress who voted for this bill voted to raise their own salaries and to saddle additional expenses upon the Government. The editors who made those statements should have known that was not true. Perhaps they did. Perhaps they did not go to the trouble to find out what they were writing about because they wanted to stir up public resentment against me and other Members of Congress they have been unable to control and to dictate to on various matters. It is not the first attacks these newspapers have made, but so far they have been unable to fool the people, and now they resort to cheap propaganda in a desperate effort to prejudice the public against Members of Congress.

The RECORD will show that this House made every effort to separate the salary and veterans' legislation; but that after the bill we had passed to reduce our salaries $1,000 a year came back from the Senate, it had been amended to restore all of the salary cuts and included also legislation for veterans. When this House refused to strike out the Senate amendments, a proposition I voted for, it was impossible to separate the two propositions.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield with pleasure to our distinguished floor leader.

Mr. BYRNS. I may say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that I think we all realize, as the gentleman from Texas stated, and he is eminently correct in his remarks—that if we had not overridden the President's veto there would have been a full salary restoration on the 1st of July.

In the same connection I may say, if the gentleman will permit me to do so at this time, that I am sure no Member on this side of the Chamber has supported the President more loyally and more earnestly in all those measures looking to the success of his plan for recovery and restoration of our country to prosperity than the gentleman from Oklahoma. [Applause.] There is no question of his loyalty to the President and to all those things for which the President stands, and I know that the President relies upon the gentleman from Oklahoma as he does upon other leading Democrats of this House in his effort to restore prosperity to the country. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am deeply grateful for the very generous compliment that our Democratic floor leader has been kind enough to pay me.

To clear up any misunderstanding on the salary question, it is only necessary to refer to the official record. It is one thing to make wild assertions but the record speaks for itself. I hold in my hand the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 11. I turn to page 487 and I find a letter from the President of the United States to Chairman BUCHANAN of the Appropriations Committee asking that 5 percent of the Federal salary cut be restored. I call your attention to the following in the President's letter to Chairman BUCHANAN:

> I have recommended a flat restoration of 5 percent, or one third of the 15-percent reduction, this restoration to apply to the next fiscal year. I have asked also for authority to restore such portions of the balance of 10 percent as may be warranted by a possible further increase in the cost of living. I hope that your committee will go along with these suggestions.

Until so requested by the President of the United States, I had steadfastly refused to vote for any portion of pay restoration of Federal salaries under any circumstances.

The House followed the President's suggestion and passed a bill to continue 10 percent of the salary reduction next year.

My record for economy on the salary matter and on other questions during consideration of this bill speaks for itself. There were numerous roll calls on this bill from the time it was introduced January 11 until it came here for final passage. Seven times during consideration of this measure the roll was called on whether or not we would increase salaries and other expenditures, and the RECORD will show that I voted with the Democratic leaders for economy at every opportunity. Not only did I vote to follow the President on the salary question, and even voted for the "gag" rule, which we hoped would fulfill the wishes of the President on the salary question, but when the final show-down came on making a choice between having the temporary provisions of the Economy Act expire next June 30 or helping these disabled war veterans, I voted to cut my own salary and do something for these helpless and mistreated war veterans.

When the bill came back to us from the Senate, it had been increased to the tune of $354,432,124. During consideration of the Senate amendments I voted consistently for economy and took the floor to plead for economy. I voted against the Senate amendment to restore these so-called "emergency officers" and helped kill that amendment placed in the bill by the Senate but eliminated by the House.

In speaking on this floor March 14, when the bill was pending, in opposition of the Senate amendment proposing to restore these emergency officers to the rolls, I said:

> We saw the sorry spectacle of former officers who had never posed as being disabled prior to the passage of the emergency officers' act take advantage of it and get on the Government pay roll at from $100 to $400 a month. We saw some "swivel-chair heroes" who never smelled powder nor saw the smoke of battle, but who sat at mahogany desks in Washington with as little as 13 days' service, manage to get themselves retired at from $200 to $400 a month. We saw generals who had never led an army, nor fired a gun, nor who ever were within 3,000 miles of the front lines get themselves retired at $416 a month. If you vote for the Senate amendment, you vote to place a large number of the generals, colonels, majors, and captains back on the pay roll. There seems to be some disagreement as to the number, but that is not the question. Those of us who want to do something for the disabled veterans of both wars, who are really in need, do not wish to be hog-tied to that provision of the Senate amendment which would put back on the pay roll emergency officers, many of whom are not in need and who should not, in my judgment, have any more consideration than is given the buck private who might have the same disabilities.

I helped save the House economy compromise. Had I changed my vote, the House plan would have been lost and the Senate amendment adopted, as will be shown by roll call no. 107, on March 16, when the economy plan was carried by a single vote. In short, it cost Members of Congress exactly $500 to support the House bill over the bill as passed by the Senate.

The controversy was not over the salary question, as a few newspapers would make the people believe. It was chiefly over the 29,000 presumptive veterans. Most of those attacking Members of Congress for passing this bill are frank to say they feel that private charity should take care of these helpless veterans, because they could not prove to the satisfaction of the hard-boiled Republican head of the Veterans' Administration that the poison gas they inhaled in France caused their tuberculosis or that the horrors of the front-line trenches resulted in their mental ills. There was not enough money raised by private charity in the entire State of Oklahoma last year for this purpose to take care of more than a mere fraction of the handful of presumptives living in that State.

Is it not rather striking that some of those who are so critical about 1 vote that does not suit their liking have condoned the dishing-out of millions and even billions of dollars to failed banks and shaky corporations through the Hoover Reconstruction Finance Corporation? Is it not peculiar that newspapers which assailed me for voting against the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Hoover moratorium, both lavish and costly subsidies, to big corporations and international bankers, should now be criticizing me for voting to assist 29,000 helpless men?

This same group declared that private charity should take care of the unemployed and the drought-stricken farmers. Congress was assailed when we proposed a Federal appropriation to feed hungry people and provide work for them. These advocates of "rugged individualism" proposed to raise $50,000,000 by private subscription to feed 25,000,000 hungry people while the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was dishing out its billions of Government money to big business.

These 29,000 veterans, whose physical and mental ills were presumed to have been caused by war service, had been cut off by the harsh and unreasonable rules of the Veterans' Administration. Physicians testified before the committee that it was impossible to tell when and how tuberculosis originated. Congress, therefore, did not feel justified in leaving to a board of laymen a final decision in such cases, because the past record revealed that some of these boards had denied compensation to men who later were able to prove they were battle casualties.

May I say here that I voted for the Economy Act a year ago in good faith, just as I have loyally supported the rest of the President's recovery program; but I must admit that I was surprised and chagrined that the Director of the Budget and the Veterans' Administration were permitted to promulgate rules under that act that cut off 300,000 service-connected veterans, including tuberculars and battle casualties. Speaking on the floor of this House on May 26, 1933, shortly after those harsh and inhumane rules had been announced, I stated in part:

> I desire at this time to enter a protest against the heartless, cruel, cold-blooded, and unreasonable manner in which those officials in charge of administering the veterans' laws propose to deal with our helpless and disabled war veterans. As one who voted for the Economy Act because of assurances given me by those in whom I had the utmost confidence, and because of my sincere desire to stand by our great President, I say here and now that I shall insist that this House remain in session until Christmas, if need be, in order to correct the wrong that is evidently about to be done to many of our disabled war veterans unless drastic action is taken before June 30.

The House amendment, for which I voted to correct these injustices, and for which abuse has been heaped upon Members of Congress, takes the matter out of the hands of appeal boards or the Veterans' Administration and gives these men a square deal under the law. But it does not place back on the rolls one non-service-connected war veteran.

Many of the appeal boards were unscientific and unreliable. Records of the Veterans' Administration show that the decisions of the special boards varied widely in the percentage of appeals allowed. The central office here allowed only 22.19 percent of the appeals; the Hines, Ill., board allowed 23.70 percent of the appeals; on up to the Charlotte, N.C., board which granted compensation to 74.68 percent of those who appealed, the highest percentage for any of the many boards scattered throughout the country. There was no rime, reason, or justice in that and no explanation why one board would allow three times as many appeals as another board.

The fight in Congress was simply a disagreement over matters of policy. No one wanted to deny compensation to any deserving veteran or to grant compensation to any undeserving one. But deserving cases were being denied and Congress proposed to remedy that and to cut out the red tape that in many cases was not unraveled until the veterans were dead or so near dead with tuberculosis that the benefits of belated compensation arrived too late to save him.

Those of us here know what red tape is. Anyone who has had any part in presenting a veteran's claim for compensation knows what red tape is. Farmers who plowed up cotton last summer and who have been trying unsuccessfully since to get their Government checks know what red tape is.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to no one in my respect and sincere affection for the President. I have supported him wholeheartedly and consistently on his recovery program, as stated a few minutes ago by our distinguished floor leader. With the single exception of this matter of veterans' legislation, I challenge any Member on this floor to show a more consistent record for having supported the President.

Some of the newspapers now attacking this Congress cannot say so much. They frequently have attacked the recovery program. Some of them have carried very unfriendly and unjustified comment on the air-mail controversy and against the stock market bill. I predict they will attack other provisions of the recovery program before this session is over.

Let me cite my record for economy during consideration of this bill. When the bill came back from the Senate increased to the tune of $354,432,124 I stood with the Speaker and leaders on the Democratic side of this aisle to vote against those amendments, but we lost by a vote of 247 to 169, as roll call no. 103 on page 4518 of the RECORD will show. On six other roll calls during consideration of this measure I voted for economy. I cite them as follows:

On January 11, roll no. 78, page 483; January 11, roll no. 79, page 510; January 11, roll no. 80, page 511; March 16, roll no. 106; page 4690; March 16, roll no. 107, page 4699; March 22, roll no. 113, page 5180.

May I state in closing that I have given facts from the official RECORD? These facts speak for themselves. I am not disturbed by the unfair tactics employed by my political enemies. Such tactics have failed in the past and will fail in the future. The charge that in voting to restore the helpless tuberculars I was making a bid for votes is absurd. There are only a handful of these veterans affected residing in the district I represent in Congress. No one knows better than I that it was poor politics to vote for those sick men, many of whom are physically unable to get to voting places. It is no easy task to vote even once against the wishes of the President. But I voted my conscientious convictions in the interest of men who had been ruthlessly wronged by the Government they fought to defend when this Nation needed real men. They did not fail us then—and by the eternals, I cannot fail them now! [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SEARS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill, H.R. 9061, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

BITUMINOUS COAL INDUSTRY

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a part of the RECORD a statement made by Mr. Forney Johnson, representing the Alabama coal operators at a hearing on code amendments for the bituminous-coal industry at Washington, D.C., on April 11, 1934.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement of Mr. Forney Johnston, representing Alabama coal operators, at hearing on code amendments for the bituminous-coal industry, Washington, D.C., April 11, 1934:

Mr. Administrator, I have reduced the request which I wished to make before the conclusion of this hearing to writing in order that I might condense it as much as possible. I hesitate, and I am sure and I trust you believe I am sincere, in making this statement that I resent the statement that was made that the operators whom I represent are not cooperating with the purposes of the hearing. That is not the situation. We are compelled to make this request because the hearing has now had an end. This matter will receive, undoubtedly, in due course consideration by the staffs, with the remote possibility, so far as the result is concerned, that our mines will be closed, our industry will be in utter demoralization, and a heavy and undue burden thrown upon the public relief in the State of Alabama. We made every effort we could to have this order suspended pending the orderly hearing pursuant to the code on the question of these proposed amendments. We have been unable so far to obtain any results. For that reason, I desire to request, as a matter of right under the code, the immediate assembling of the National Bituminous Coal Industrial Board provided for by article VII, section 4, of the code to consider and to make recommendations to the divisional code authority and to the President as to any amendments of (the) code or other measures which may stabilize and improve the conditions of the industry and promote the public interest therein.

I insist on behalf of the Alabama operators that no amendments be approved or imposed, whether agreed to on behalf of particular divisions or not until this board has made recommendations as to policies and has discharged the functions for which the board was intended.

Action by the Administrator in approving or imposing amendments without the recommendations of this board amount to a usurpation of the functions of the board, violate the covenant held out by the code itself and subject the policy and administration of the coal code to impulsive and irrational action, such as characterized the premature approval of the amendments proposed by certain subdivisions of division no. 1 and subject the formulation of important policies to the grave charges of manipulation that would have been pressed at this hearing by the Smokeless Association.

Until there is a policy there is no code. It is still a mere matter of medieval bargaining between so-called "representatives" of the industry and so-called "representatives" of labor, rubber-stamped by the Administrator without information, definite policy, or any reaction whatever except the line of least resistance and the prevailing pressure of the moment.

Most important of all the prevailing system of code amendments, as evidenced by the arbitrary, illegal, and unwarranted action of the Administrator released on March 31, violated every basic principle and covenant of the code as far as division III is concerned and in particular that action junked and violated every basic study of fact assembled by the administration at great expense both to the administration and to the operators.

I refer particularly to hte basic code assembled by the administration under article V (g).

I make the assertion here that the Administrator in approving the so-called "amendments" on March 31 not only did not act after recommendation by the industrial board but acted without knowledge of or reference to the data assembled under article V (g) and in both respects acted in violation of the code.

I insist that there can be no rational program under the one-man, here-one-minute-and-gone-the-next policy reflected in the so-call "amendments" of March 31, and I protest on behalf of the Alabama operators against any amendment whatsoever until policy has been defined and until the law and the code have been complied with.

These amendments combine the law of the jungle with the worst features of a military despotism and so far as the Alabama field is concerned the amendments are and will continue to be treated as null and void. Aside from that view, we are profoundly concerned with the redemption of the code system from the triumvirate rubber-stamped by the Administrator, and insist upon compliance not only with the law but with first necessity for any permanent reorganization or stabilization of the industry.

So far as we are concerned we have definitely and finally determined that we will not conform to any further one-man determination of policy and dictation in repudiation of essential basis and covenant of the code.

That conclusion on our part is final, and we are prepared to take the consequences in an effort to save this industry from a destination worse than the economic chaos of the past. As between civil war in the industry and subjection of the industry to three proconsuls working through a military ringmaster, we prefer civil war.

Before acquiescing to either alternative we demand a trial of the covenants of the code and of the President's Executive order approving the code.
